INTRODUCTION

The International Cooperative Alliance has been concerned from its inception with the need for research dealing with the principles and practices of cooperation. Within our organization we recognize the need to examine where we came from, what we are doing (right or wrong) and where we should be going.

Others, too, have recognized this need for research if the cooperative movement of the world is to grow, expand and become an ever stronger force for the aspirations of humanity.

One of the manifestations of this interest on the part of ICA was the preparation in 1973 of a Directory of Cooperative Research Organizations. This was done as part of the effort to examine the relevancy of cooperatives to the "Second Development Decade" proclaimed by the United Nations. It was the first step in the project which resulted in the creation of the Research Register, that unique source of bibliography data concerning cooperatives in developing countries which remains a joint effort of ICA and the Cooperative Research Institutes in Poland and Hungary.

When consideration was being given to the continuation of the Research Register beyond the period of the UN development decade, it was recognized that it was also important to update and expand the Directory of Cooperative Research Organizations and to begin an effort to more fully inter-relate the research efforts underway in many countries.

The ICA Congress held in Hamburg in 1984 affirmed ICA's interest in cooperative research and designated it as a priority concern of the world cooperative movement.

In the light of these events, ICA was pleased to accept the offer of the Committee for the Promotion of Aid to Cooperatives (COPAC) to assist in the updating of the ICA Directory. As one of the seven members of COPAC, ICA felt that such a joint effort could benefit all who share an interest in research regarding cooperative development.

COPAC has collected, when available, new data to update that included in the 1973 Directory on each organization. With the help of others they have identified new organizations to be included.

We are pleased now to make this new Directory available to all who share ICA's interest in cooperative research. In a world that grows more inter-related day-by-day, we hope that you will use the Directory to build new or expanded relationships with your cooperative colleagues around the world. It will be by such modest steps that we can build together the world of the future which will be a more cooperative place in which to live and work.

Geneva, March 1985
