Co-operatives and Food Security

WORLD FOOD
SUMMIT

Rome

13-17 November 1996

ICA was able to present the views of the co-operative movement to the World Food Summit in November in Rome, Italy, with invaluable assistance from the International Agricultural Co-operative Organization (IFAP). After having provided input to the preparatory meetings, ICA presented its final statement to the World Food Summit highlighting the contribution of co-operatives to the production and distribution of food, but most importantly the role of co-operatives in providing the income and employment that are essential to food security.

The ICA also forged partnerships with other organizations in order to ensure that the important role of co-operatives to food security was highlighted. A joint statement of the Agri-Food Sector emphasized that food production, its distribution and the raw materials necessary for feeding the world were core concerns for the private sector - i.e. all business elements in the food chain - from the individual and family farms, via co-operative enterprises right through to multinational corporations.

Both the ICA and the private sector statements were circulated to the delegates of the World Summit. Copies are available from the ICA Secretariat.

The outcome of the Summit was the Rome Declaration and Plan of Action. It recognizes "the fundamental role of farmers, fishers, foresters, indigenous people and their communities, and all other people involved in the food sector, and of their organizations, supported by effective research and extension, in attaining food security". It further identifies specific areas where there is a need for dialogue and more importantly partnerships between government and farmers (fishers and foresters) and their representative organizations with two specific paragraphs dedicated to the role of co-operatives.

ICA and the ICAO, its specialised body for agriculture, are already discussing the follow-up to the Summit and will continue to work with their new partners to further contribute to ensuring that people have sufficient food.

The Rome Declaration and Plan of Action is available on the Internet (<http://www.fao.org/wfs/policy/policy.htm>) or from the FAO, via delle Terme di Caracalla, 00100 Rome, Italy.

Canadian Co-ops and Credit Unions Forge International Links

by John Julian
of the Canadian Co-operative Association

At first glance, Fort St. John in B.C.'s Peace River District, in the extreme northwest of Canada, might seem to have very little in common with the town of Lichtenburg in the sun-baked Transvaal region of South Africa. Yet these two far-flung communities share a powerful connection.

The strongest link is a human one. Ingrid Fischer is the general manager of North Peace Savings and Credit Union in Fort St. John. In 1994 she spent seven months in the Transvaal sharing her expertise with a tiny, emerging credit union in Lichtenburg. Another connection is the Canadian Co-operative Association (CCA), the national association of co-operatives and credit unions in the English speaking areas of Canada. In addition to various domestic roles, CCA is the international development arm for its Canadian members. It initiated and continues to support the partnership with credit unions in British Columbia that took Ingrid Fischer to South Africa.

A third link between these two communities, according to Fischer, is a shared belief in the power of co-operation in strengthening communities. "Both credit unions arise from needs within the communities they serve," Fischer said. "Here, farmers needed access to credit that they couldn't get from banks. My experience in South Africa is that black people have great difficulty in getting credit. In both cases we had a need that wasn't being met, and a group of people within the community who were willing to work together to meet that need."

North Peace Savings and Credit Union, with assets of Canadian $63 million and more than 6,500 members, has been an engine of economic growth and stability in a region which suffers from the vagaries of a resource based economy. In Lichtenburg, with Ingrid Fischer's help, Itireleng Credit Union has doubled its asset base to more than 1 million rand (Canadian $400,000), allowing its 170 members to improve their housing, to purchase vehicles, and to finance the education of their children.

For more than 20 years CCA has helped to link the co-operative system in Canada with emerging organizations in the developing world. With the financial backing of the Federal government through the Canadian International Development Agency, Canadian co-operatives have assisted thousands of co-operative organizations in more than 40 countries to strengthen communities and improve income levels for members. Co-operatives and credit unions contribute money to the cause, and each year more than fifty co-operative employees and leaders, like Ingrid Fischer, contribute their skills and experience.

The fact that co-operatives worldwide operate from a common set of principles provides a common base of understanding that makes it easier to transfer specific skills or expertise. And because of the success of co-operative ventures in that country, Canadian expertise is much in demand.

The partnership that CCA has developed between the credit unions of British Columbia and South Africa is a case in point. In spite of a well developed banking sector, the majority of black South Africans have had no access to the financial services they need in order to develop economically. Credit co-ops are filling that need.

Kwedie Mkalipi, a former anti-apartheid activist who served 18 years in prison for his opposition to the former regime, is general secretary of the Savings and Credit Co-operative League of South Africa.

"Because of the apartheid system, we were very isolated when we first sought to develop our movement," Mkalipi said recently. "We went looking for help within South Africa but the advice received came from people who did not understand co-operatives. It was like asking directions from a one-eyed man. He will point you in the only direction he can see."

"With CCA we entered into a true co-operative partnership. Others had said, 'That is the way to Jericho. Go that way.' CCA said, 'We know the road to Jericho. Travel with us'."

Helping the development of the co-operative movement in a poorer country can lead to business opportunities and other benefits for the donor co-operatives. Because co-operatives have a business focus, it is not uncommon for development partnerships to evolve into business relationships. For example, for more than 10 years CCA, in partnership with the Colombian Association of Co-operatives (ASCOOP), has provided support to small co-operatives serving the poor of that country. Today, a self-sufficient ASCOOP continues to provide those services on its own. However, at a time of rapidly expanding trade relations between the two countries, CCA has maintained its involvement in Colombia in order to help co-operatives on both sides of the equation capitalize on the commercial possibilities.

Luis Arturo Muñoz, general manager of ASCOOP, describes this as a maturing of the relationship between the two organizations. CCA, he says, provided support when it was needed, but it also pushed ASCOOP to become self-sufficient. Now, as equals, CCA and ASCOOP are researching various business opportunities, such as importing tropical fruit from Colombia into Canada.

While commercial activities in Colombia are still at the research stage, CCA's work in other countries has yielded concrete commercial results. In Costa Rica, for example, beans are now being purchased from Alberta Wheat Pool, a CCA member organization. B.C. Tree Fruits, another CCA member co-operative, was involved, for a time, in a joint-venture fruit packing operation in China as a result of CCA development activities there.

Not all of the benefits realized by Canadian organizations through their involvement with CCA are strictly financial. For many of the Canadians who volunteer their time to work overseas, the experience is a life-changing event, both professionally and personally.

John Wipf is an actuarial student with The Co-operators Group Ltd., a large Canadian insurance co-operative. He has made three visits to the Philippines, totalling nearly 12 months, to assist an emerging co-operative insurance company there. "I think I am much more effective in my own job because of that experience," he said. "It matured me in many ways. Because of that experience I have much deeper insights into my own profession than I had before."

For Wipf, working with CCA helped him realize some of his own potential. In many respects, realizing potential is what the Canadian Co-operative Association's work is all about.

Mkalipi of South Africa describes it this way. "CCA identified in us a sleeping giant. They have done a great deal of work to make that sleeping giant awake. I am convinced that before the end of this century we will have credit unions in South Africa to rival those in North America."

NCBA Releases New Video "The ABCs of Co-operative Child Care"

The National Cooperative Business Association (NCBA) has released the second in its developing series of "how to" videos. The first "How to Run a Co-op Food Buying Club", released in 1993, has proven to be a practical and popular resource. Produced in conjunction with the University of California Center for Co-operatives, the new video contains valuable information that will help families start and run their own co-operative child care centers.

With more than half of the women with children under age one in the workforce, the need for child care has become an issue for them and their employers. Increasingly, parents and employers are turning to professionally managed child care co-operatives as the best way to meet the need for child care. The video explains how co-operative child care centers - member owned and run enterprises - provide high quality, affordable child care for their member families. In producing the video, NCBA looked for examples of co-operatives from across the United States and Canada.

The 21-minuted video is available in VHS format in both English and Spanish for the price of US $19.95 each. "The ABCs of Cooperative Child Care" and "How to Run a Co-op Food Buying Club" are also available as a package for US $35.00. For further information, contact Jill Stevenson, NCBA, Washington D.C. The objectives of the conference were to exchange views and experiences on the role of rural women in agricultural co-operatives and on measures taken to raise the living standards of rural women engaged in the agricultural sector through income generating activities and better working conditions.

Asian Medical Co-ops Meet

The second meeting of Medical Co-operatives from the Asia-Pacific region was held at Mumbai (Bombay), India from 2-3 November, 1996. Twenty-eight delegates from India, Japan, Nepal, Republic of Korea and Sri Lanka participated at the meeting which was chaired by Dr. S. Kato, chairperson of the International Health Co-operative Organisation. The main item of discussion was the formation of an Asia-Pacific Health Co-operative Organisation (APHCO) and its relationship with the IHCO. The forum appointed a working committee consisting of Dr. Ogino from Japan, Dr. Vijay Deshmukh from India and Lionel Samarasinghe from Sri Lanka to draft the constitution for the organisation. The committee subsequently met on 26 December to draft the constitution, which will be discussed at the next meeting in March 1997. The general meeting of the committee will be held in the latter part of 1997.

During the proceedings of the meeting, there were several proposals for the bilateral exchange of medical practitioners as well as a technical co-operation programme among developed and developing countries in the region.

Agri-business Symposium

ICA Regional Office for Asia and the Pacific held a symposium on the Impact of Globalization on the Competitive Strength of Agri-business Co-operatives in Asia and the Pacific from 30 November to 1 December 1996 at Yangon, Myanmar. About 30 delegates participated in the symposium.

ICA Organises Youth Seminar

ICA ROAP held a regional seminar on Youth Co-operatives in Singapore from 21-23 November 1996, in collaboration with the National Federation of University Co-operative Associations (NFUCA), Japan and the Singapore National Co-operative Federation (SNCF).

The seminar brought together 250 delegates from Thailand, Malaysia, Vietnam, Japan, Sri Lanka, Republic of Korea, Philippines and Singapore. The seminar discussed youth issues in the Asia-Pacific region and the potential of co-operatives to integrate youth into the main stream of development as well as setting up of youth co-operatives in the region. Co-operative identity and leadership formed the major part of the discussions. Dr. Aline Wong, Senior Minister of State for Education in Singapore was expected to inaugurate the seminar.

Seminar on Agro-processing

A Regional seminar on agro-processing was organised by the ICA Regional Office for Asia and the Pacific, in collaboration with the All China Federation of Supply and Marketing Co-operatives (ACFSMC) in Dalian city (China) from 11-22 November 1996. Sixteen delegates from seven countries participated in the seminar.

The Americas

Regional Meetings

From November 18-23 San Jose, Costa Rica, was the centre of a major series of events organised by the ICA's Regional Office for the Americas, which brought together more than 600 co-operative leaders from across the continent.

The first Continental Women's Meeting ever held in the Americas, following several years of national and regional workshops, resulted in the adoption of a Platform of Action on Gender Issues, much of which was subsequently incorporated into the Regional Office's Strategic Plan for the period 1996-2000.

This meeting was followed by a three-day Regional Conference on the theme of "De-globalisation", featuring a variety of high-level presentations on the economic challenges facing co-operatives in the Americas, as well as strategies for the future.

The Regional Assembly for the Americas, held on 23 November under the chairmanship of Roberto Rodrigues, President of ICA-Americas, formally approved the Regional Office's new Strategic Plan, as well as a revised set of Rules for the Regional Assembly.

The Assembly will henceforth be composed of representatives of the Specialised Organisations in the region, in addition to representatives of ICA member organisations.

Members also approved the creation of a new position of Alternate President for the Americas, to which Miguel Cardozo of Uruguay was elected.

The 1997 Regional Conference, to be held in Mexico, will feature the themes of youth in co-operatives and the role of co-operatives in providing employment. The 1998 Regional Assembly will be held in Uruguay.

Europe

Regional Assembly

The Second ICA Regional Assembly for Europe was held in Budapest, Hungary, on 30 October 1996 under the chairmanship of Lars Hillbom, ICA Vice-President. The meeting was attended by 180 representatives and observers.

The Assembly was preceded by an International Seminar organized jointly with IRU on financial co-operatives, which had a large participation from Central and Eastern European co-operative movements, and by several specialised organisations' meetings.

László Lakos, Minister of Agriculture, himself a co-operative member, welcomed participants on behalf of the Hungarian Government and the message of the Prime Minister was read out. The head of the NGO section of the Council of Europe, Géza Mezei attended the Assembly as a special guest.

In his address, Graham Melmoth, President of ICA, referred to activities going on in other regions as well as at global ICA level.

The Regional Assembly adopted the activity report on 1996 and the work plan for 1997, welcomed two new members to the Region, the co-operative apex organisations from Malta and Bosnia-Herzegovina, discussed and approved a report prepared by the Working Group on Assistance to Central and Eastern Europe.

After the procedural matters, the afternoon session was devoted to the topic of "Corporate Governance and Management Control Systems in European Co-operatives" based on the background paper drafted by Reimer Volkers and Moira Lees. Six speakers - I. Barberini (Italy), P. Bartus (Hungary), R. Itkonen (Finland), A. Nicolaisen (Denmark), E. Pflimlin (France) and S. Sivertsen (Norway)- touched upon various aspects of the main theme, such as internal and external controls, gender aspects, management control experiences of a country in transition, auditors' responsibilities related to reports to members, and technical and democratic controls in co-operative banks.

The discussion was facilitated by Lloyd Wilkinson, CEO of the Co-operative Union, UK. A final statement was distributed and adopted by the Assembly serving as guidelines for co-operative movements in their follow-up work on Governance issues.

The Assembly confirmed the nomination of Lars Hillbom to the post of ICA Vice-President and accepted the invitation of the French co-operative movement (GNC) to hold the next Regional Assembly for Europe in France in autumn 1998.

Highlights of the ICA Board Meeting

During its meeting in Budapest last October the Board approved a record number of membership applications. Of the 17 new ICA member organisations, 14 are from the Americas region. Other new members are from Palestine, Malta, and Bosnia-Herzegovina.

The Board also officially approved the establishment of the ICA Development Trust as the formal body that will implement the ICA's development programme in the future. The members of the ICA Board will constitute the Board of the Development Trust, and its management will be carried out by the staff of the ICA Development Section. At its next meeting the Board will consider the establishment of a global advisory body for the Trust.

The Board accepted a management recommendation that the ICA Regional Office for West Africa be relocated from Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, to Ouagadougou in Burkina Faso. As previously discussed with the Regional Council, this will result in significant financial savings.

The Board continued its examination of how to improve the representation of women within co-operative organisations. It was agreed that the ICA President would write to all member organisations in order to encourage them to give high priority to this issue, and also ask them to inform ICA of their policies and targets.

After achieving a surplus of over 225,000 Swiss francs in 1995, largely due to the success of the Manchester Congress, ICA is projecting only a small surplus for both 1996 and 1997. The Board approved these financial reports and requested management to continue its discussions with representatives of those sectors in which changes to the subscription formula or process are desirable. The 1997 General Assembly, now scheduled to be held in Geneva on 15 and 16 September, will feature elections to the Board and the Audit and Control Committee. Member organisations will be requested to submit nominations, as per the Rules, three months prior to the meeting.

The Special Committee on Rules and Finance was asked to examine the possibility of establishing a Nominations Committee in order to improve the representation of regions, sectors, and women on the ICA Governing Bodies.

The next ICA Board meeting will be held on April 18-19, in Uganda, at the invitation of the ICA Vice-President for Africa, Bernard Wolimbwa. The Board also accepted an invitation from "the ICA's Canadian member organisations to hold the 1999 General Assembly in Quebec, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the Desjardins caisse populaire movement.

Pioneers on the Tourist Map - in Six Languages

Guide books have been introduced in six languages at the Rochdale Pioneers Museum, birthplace of the Co-operative Movement, to meet the demand from international visitors.

The famous landmark in Toad Lane, Rochdale, is visited by up to 10,000 people every year - including many from overseas.

Thanks to a financial contribution from the European Union, which allocated funds following the 150th anniversary of the Rochdale Pioneers in 1994, the Museum's principal guide book has now been produced in French, German, Italian, Spanish and Japanese, as well as English.

"The Rochdale Pioneers were the inspiration for the Co-operative idea spreading around the world, and we receive hundreds of international visitors at Toad Lane - including large groups from Japan", commented Iain Williamson, Museum Curator. "This new brochure tells the remarkable story of the early Pioneers as well as explaining the many objects on display in the Museum today."

The translations were carried out by Total Coverage Ltd, a workers' co-operative based in Southampton, and the full-colour brochures have been printed by the Co-operative Press in Manchester. The brochures are available at £1.50 each plus postage from the Co-operative Union Ltd, Holyoake House, Hanover Street, Manchester M60 0AS. Rochdale Club

It was in 1844 that the first co-operative was formed in the town of Rochdale, England. It all started with a tiny rented grocery shop in an old warehouse with only 28 people distributing only five staple items. The Rochdale spirit of co-operatives "to support our life by serving ourselves" is still very much alive among co-operative followers throughout the world. Osaka Izumi Co-op opened the "Rochdale Club" in July 1987 with a view to inheriting the Rochdale spirit and developing new contacts and cultural activities. After eight years, the number of people who have used the club has reached over 300,000. The Club is the center of attention not only from members and employees but also business traders, scholars and VIPs in various sectors as a new communication space for meetings, talks, relaxation, improvement and recreation. It provides musical entertainment on a regular basis.

New Insurance System for Quake Victims

Destruction of coop property by Hanshin

Taking a lesson from the January, 1995 earthquake which hit the Kansai region of Japan and in particular the city of Kobe, the Japanese Consumers Co-operative Union (JCCU) and the National Federation of Workers and Consumers Insurance Co-operatives (ZENROSAI), in association with the government of the Hyogo Prefecture and the Japan Federation of Bar Associations, have agreed on a joint plan to establish 'a disaster insurance contingency scheme' against future risks. They have also agreed to request the government to use the scheme to provide relief for the victims of the last earthquake (Hanshin).

The agreement provides for the establishment of a national insurance scheme for house reconstruction in case of natural disasters, such as earthquakes, floods or volcanic eruptions, covering losses and damages to houses and household articles.

The four organisations launched a campaign and collected millions of signatures from citizens supporting the scheme, which will be submitted to the government. The JCCU alone will be collecting fifteen million signatures in co-operation with its members.

Children Reporters at JA Fukumitsu - Chuo

To make children know more about JA, a gathering of children reporters was organised by JA Fukumitsu-Chuo. This event was sponsored by JA's information Journal "First" and twelve elementary and junior high school children participated with the recommendation of the Fukumitsu City School. Mr. Maeda, the councillor from JA, gave an address taking "Chagurin" the children's magazine published by the Ie no Kikari group as a reference and explained about JA's activities and future agriculture. Good Results for FairPrice NTUC FairPrice, the supermarket co-op, reported a group turnover of $647.35 million for the year ending 31 March 1996. This represents a 7.7% jump over the previous year. The co-op's group net profits also jumped over 25% to $50.38 million. With its good performance, FairPrice will be paying out $31.4 million to its shareholders through a 6% dividend and an 8% patronage rebate. The co-op's membership now exceeds 320,000 and, over the next 12 months, another six outlets will be opened to add to its current 53 stores in Singapore.

Co-operative Bank Introduces Teleworking

The Co-operative Bank, UK has introduced a pilot scheme with a number of staff from the Collections Department, who will be working from home, on the basis of the teleworking agreement which the bank signed with the banking union BIFU. Based on the practice already in place in many industries, the agreement ensures that the bank staff working from home will have appropriate terms and conditions for their circumstances. For teleworkers, the benefits include increased flexibility, reduced travelling time and expenses, more free time and often the ability to integrate home and work life more effectively. Teleworking can help the Bank reduce recruiting and retaining costs, apart from providing additional working options for the staff.

Co-op Bank Introduces Schools Affinity Cards

In a most ambitious affinity scheme introduced by the Co-operative Bank in October, 1996, parents and their family and friends will be given the chance to do some fund raising to contribute towards their children's education, through their spending. For every card opened in the schools name, £5 will be donated to the school and a further 25p. for every £100 spent on the card. The head teachers of the school will be involved in the scheme and it is their responsibility to sign up as many parents as possible. To coincide with the launch of the Schools Card, a national competition will be launched in collaboration with the Guardian newspaper, aimed at schools, to find the Young Ethical Entrepreneurs of the Year. The competition winners will be invited to discover the challenges of handling an ethical business by running the Co-operative Bank for a day, besides willing £500 for each age category for their schools. The competition is aimed at 14-16 and 16-18 age groups.

World Habitat Awards: Call for Entries 1997

The World Habitat Awards were initiated in 1985 as part of the Building and Social Housing Foundation's (B&SHF) contribution to the United Nations International Year of Shelter for the Homeless in 1987. The principle objective of the international year was for every nation to draw up strategies, policies and programmes that would enable practical and attainable improvements to be made in the shelter and neighbourhoods of all poor and disadvantaged people by the year 2000.

Entries are currently being sought for the 1997 World Habitat Award. This year is the thirteenth year of this annual competition, which has been highly successful in attracting outstanding human settlements projects. The winning projects have received world-wide publicity, with a view to encouraging their replication in many other countries.

Projects are sought, in both developed and developing countries, which offer sustainable futures to residents and which provide practical and imaginative solutions to current housing problems.

A panel of international assessors evaluate the projects. The two award winners each year receive £10,000 plus an individually designed and crafted silver trophy. The awards are presented each year on World Habitat Day and in 1996 were presented by Mr. Gábor Kuncze, Minister of the Interior of the Republic of Hungary in Budapest, Hungary.

The B&SHF is now calling for entries for 1997. Preliminary submissions should be sent before 31 July 1997.

IYEP

In 1993, the UN General Assembly proclaimed 1996 as the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty (IYEP), "recognizing that poverty is a complex and multi-dimensional problem with origins in both the national and international domains, and that its eradication in all countries, in particular in developing countries, has become one of the priority development objectives for the 1990s in order to promote sustainable development". Boutros Boutros-Ghali said that the International Day for the Eradication of Poverty posed a challenge to the international community to do more to stem the rising tide of world poverty. The global observance of this Day is aimed at promoting public awareness of the causes of poverty and the need to eradicate such destitution.

The United Nations Department of Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development organized, jointly with the ICA, a panel discussion on 1 July 1996 at the UN Headquarters in New York on the theme "Partnership between the United Nations and the International Co-operative Movement in the follow-up to Copenhagen, Beijing and Istanbul". Representatives from the Co-operative Movement joined Nintin Desai, Under Secretary-General for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, to discuss concrete measures that would allow the effective engagement of the Co-operative Movement in the implementation of the strategies adopted in Copenhagen, Beijing and Istanbul. Under Secretary-General Desai opened the meeting by stressing the special role of the organized segments of civil society - one of the largest being the co-operative movement. Co-operatives have an important role to play in implementing the programmes of action of the recent global conferences. The aim of the meeting was to identify ways for practical expression of these goals. Mr. Desai pointed out that unlike other segments of civil society, the co-op movement has a unique body which was already bringing together United Nations agencies and NGOs to coordinate their activities in co-operative development. The Committee for the Promotion and Advancement of Cooperatives (COPAC) was a good starting point for practical implementation.

Co-op Day in Slovakia

The International Co-operative Day 1996 was widely celebrated in Slovakia this year with representatives from the Government and many foreign visitors attending the festivities which included International Seminar on Systems of Governance and Management in Co-operatives and Management and COOPEXPO'96, the 3rd co-operative exhibition, where a wide range of products from agricultural, workers and consumer co-ops were available as well as a fashion show twice daily.

Another important event which had taken place earlier in the year was also highlighted during the day. This was the 200th anniversary of the birth of Samuel Jurkovic, a founder and pioneer of the cooperative movement in Europe. Commemorative coins and a postcard in honour of and including the portrait and house of Samuel Jurkovic, issued by the philatelists of Brezova pod Bradlom, his native town, were also on sale during the celebrations.

The Union of the Slovak Republic gave prominence to the promotion of the Slovak co-operative movement at national and international level, with the adoption of a new Co-operative Act as one of the principle objectives. The new Act should solve legal obstacles for establishing credit and savings co-operatives, and ease restrictions. A highly successful health insurance co-operative, which was founded only a few years ago and already has over 100,000 members, is just one example of the dynamic changes in Slovakia.

Web Site Launched to Honour International Co-operative Day

The National Co-operative Business Association (NCBA) launched a web site devoted to helping people understand what co-operatives are and how they can use the co-operative model to help themselves and their communities, on the internet, to celebrate the International Co-operative Day, Saturday, July 6.

The site is located at <http://www.cooperative.org> and the site's home page features areas which lead the viewer to more information about food co-ops, childcare co-ops, housing co-ops, agricultural co-ops, financial co-ops, co-operative economic development, NCBA, and more.

Co-operative Image in the Year 2,000

The ICA Communications Committee and ICA Europe are hosting a Communications Seminar on Co-operative Image in the Year 2,000 which will seek to formulate strategies for enhancing the co-operative image and investigate how the growth of new technologies can benefit co-operative communications and democracy.

The Seminar will take place on 29 October in the Agro Hotel, Budapest, just prior to the ICA Regional Assembly for Europe. Keynote speakers include Byron Henderson from the Centre for the Study of Co-operatives, University of Saskatchewan, Canada, who will discuss the strengthening of community identity among international organizations through the use of electronic networks and Andrew Booth, of World Television, who will explain how television can be used to enhance the co-operative image and discuss a promotional strategy for the ICA and its members. Members of the ICACC Executive, Zahid Qureshi of ICMIF and Iain Williamson of Coop Union, UK, will also be speaking. Mr. Qureshi will talk about harnessing the collective genius of people to create the results they truly desire and Iain Williamson will reflect on the Desk-Top Publishing revolution of the past ten years and its implications for the future.

In Brief

ICMIF Sponsors Workshop

CLIMBS, the Co-operative Life Mutual Benefit Services Association, Inc. of the Philippines organized an ICMIF-sponsored seminar-workshop on possible Philippine Co-op Insurers' Unification at Taal, Tagaytay on September 23-24, 1996.

Environmental Stand

CICOPA is conducting a membership survey on the achievements of co-operatives in supplying healthy, biological and non-polluting products; and in implementing production processes which avoid polluting air, water and the environment in general.

New Constitution

Last June the ICA Consumer Committee for Asia and the Pacific adopted a new constitution which only allows non-member organizations to join the committee if they adhere to co-operative principles and are recommended by the national apex co-operative organization.

Agricultural Sub-Committee Resolution on Food Security

On June 12, 1996, the ICA Committee on Agriculture for Asia and the Pacific adopted a resolution on Food Security to be presented at the World Food Summit.

The resolution expressed the willingness of the committee to participate in FAO's efforts in drafting the Policy statement and Plan of action at the World Food Summit which aims at solving global food problems, and hoped that the summit would agree on a solution to the world's food insecurity and unsustainable agricultural development.

The committee also realizes that the Asia-Pacific region, which already has over sixty percent of world's population, will face a rapid increase in population and the demand for more nutritious food. The loss of agricultural land to industrialization and trade liberalization, will be the core of global food problems in the future. The committee believes that family farming is the best regional model to safeguard rural communities and the environment. The resolution urged governments in the region to provide incentives promoting family farms and co-operatives.

The resolution also noted that the inauguration of the World Trade Organization weakened the economic viability of the small family farms in the region.

On behalf of agricultural co-operatives in the region, the Committee recommended that the vital roles of family farms and agricultural co-operatives, in increasing food production and protecting the environment, should be reflected in the World Food Summit's Policy Statement and Plan of Action.

Africa

African Regional Assembly

The Second ICA Regional Assembly for Africa was held in Dakar, Senegal, on 16 August under the chairmanship of Bernard Wolimbwa, ICA Vice-President. It was preceded by a seminar on Education, Training, Communication and Information, involving participants from across Africa, and by a strategic planning session for the Regional Office for West Africa (ROWA).

The Regional Assembly endorsed the four-year Regional Development Plan prepared by the Regional Office for East, Central and Southern Africa, as well as the guidelines for ROWA's new four-year programme.

It also welcomed the offer by ICA's Egyptian member organizations to provide facilities for a locally-financed liaison office for North Africa, which could be opened in 1997 to assist the two existing regional offices to extend their services northwards.

The Assembly approved the establishment of a new pan-African Agricultural Committee, as well as a Womens' Committee for the West African region. ring the West African Regional Council, which preceded the Regional Assembly, the ICA-Director General informed the Assembly that, as part of ICA's efforts to reduce operating costs in Africa, while maintaining its presence in both the sub-regions, serious consideration is being given to transferring the Regional Office for West Africa from Abidjan to a less expensive location. The Regional Director, A.S. Kibora, will keep members informed of progress.

The Assembly accepted the offer from the Zambian Co-operative Federation to hold the 1998 assembly in Lusaka when, according to the agreement between the two regions, a representative from West Africa will be nominated as ICA Vice-President for Africa.

Europe

Hungary to Host Regional Assembly

Over 200 delegates from 40 countries will gather at the Agro-Hotel, Budapest from October 24 to 30 for the European Regional Assembly and associated meetings. The main issues for discussion will be East West Collaboration and Corporate Governance and Management Control Systems in European Co-operatives. Meetings of the Specialised Bodies will precede the Regional Meetings.

ICA to Launch Development Fund

A Development fund for Co-ops in the Third and former Communist Worlds will be launched in Budapest. The ICA Project Development annual budget amounts to some $10 million; the fund will channel these resources, deriving from the leading Co-operative Movements and development agencies of Europe, North America and Japan. The ICA is appealing to its members to supplement this core funding by further contributions.

Asia-Pacific

Management Training Course

The eleventh ICA/Japan Training Course for Strengthening Management of Agricultural Co-operatives in Asia will be held from 4 November 1996 to 25 April, 1997, in India, Sri Lanka and Japan. The Ministry of Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries (MAFF) of the Government of Japan will continue to fund this project.

Programmes for Asian Women Leaders

The sixth ICA/Japan Training Course for Rural Women Leaders of Agricultural Co-operatives in Asia will be held at the Institute for the Development of Agricultural Co-operation in Asia (IDACA), Tokyo, Japan from October 20 to November 16, 1996. Six participants, two each from Indonesia, Malaysia and Pakistan, will attend.

A regional conference of top level women farm leaders of agricultural co-operatives will be organized in Tokyo from 20- 26 October, 1996, jointly by the ICA, IDACA and the Central Union of Agricultural Co-operatives of Japan (JAZENCHU).

Co-operative Business Development

The third ICA/NACF regional seminar on Agricultural Co-operative Business Development, with special reference to Korean Experience' was held at the Agricultural Co-operative College near Seoul on last May. Participants came from China, India, Malaysia, Mongolia, Myanmar, the Philippines and Vietnam.

The Americas

San José World Capital to the Co-op Movement

The ICA Regional Office for the Americas is preparing a series of events which will make San José the Co-operative Movement's capital city, given the importance of the themes addressed and the number of delegates expected. Hundreds of co-operators will attend, the majority from the Americas' region, but with delegations from other regions as well. This is a summary of the events to be held:

A continental forum of women co-operators will be held from 18 - 19 November with the theme: "How many are we and what do we want?" This Forum will open a wide and genuine space to women co-operators from the Americas' continent to discuss their position and expectations regarding the cooperative movement. Experts on the topic will state the gender outlook and its projection towards the next millennium.

The second event is the 1996 Regional Conference "Deglobalization: Global Challenge - Local Markets.... the Co-operative Strategy" to be held 20-22 November. The aim is to strengthen both the knowledge on the globalization process and the alternative ways to face it through the local markets.

Finally, the Regional Assembly of the Americas will take place 23 November and its main goal is the approval of the International Co-operative Alliance Strategy Plan for 1996 - 2000.

Co-op Dream Alive in the Rubble of Ruamjai

by David Shanks of the Canadian Co-operative Association

The search is on as Jalan Thuansuwan, 36, steps gingerly over the rubble that was once his home. He has trouble negotiating the broken boards and bottles that litter a patch of earth he once knew like the back of his hand. Careful not to slip into the murky waters of the klung below, Jalan is looking for the spot where he lived for 29 years. Gone is the doorway through which as a young man he proudly brought his bride Thawin and later their newborn son Thawat. Also gone is the wooden porch from whose uneven steps he watched manicured rice fields disappear under Bangkok's relentless advance of buildings, billboards and dusty sidewalks.

Moments later the wiry young man points to a clump of boards near an old shoe. "Here it is!" As Jalan speaks, the back hoe that had flattened his home days earlier is still at work among the rubble of the community.

"The landlord's son was my best friend when I was a boy," says Jalan wiping dust from his eyes. "His mother told us we could stay on her land until she died. But now they want to build an apartment here so we must leave." Like dozens of communities caught in Bangkok's breathtaking growth, the 23 families living in Ruamjai Samakkhi are expendable. "The landlord has a bad heart," says Jalan. "Thailand is growing but the heart of the people is not."

But the people of Ruamjai are wrestling back control of their future. With help from the Canadian Co-operative Association (CCA) and a local housing organization called Building Together Association, they joined 31 families from a ten-year-old settlement in nearby Bangna to buy some land of their own. When construction is completed - sometime in 1997/8 - 54 families will make the move to a site in neighbouring Samutprakarn province just 5 km beyond the edge of Bangkok. "We formed our savings group in 1992 and became Muang Mai Phattana Housing Co-operative Ltd.," says Jalan, who joined the co-op board two years ago. This gave members the buying power they needed to arrange a loan from the Urban Community Development Office (UCDO), a Thai agency set up five years ago to give loans to poor people.

Jalan remembers how hard it was at first to set aside money from their meagre income. He earns 8,000 Baht ($400 CDN) a month as a driver for a municipal welfare agency and, though his income has grown in recent years, the cost of living has jumped dramatically in that same time. Today, each family pays 750 Baht ($37 CDN) a month towards the loan and an extra 250 Baht ($12 CDN) to prepare the land for construction. The 20-hectare property is located on wetlands and must be drained and land filled before construction can begin. Their old homes destroyed, families from Ruamjai have already begun to move to temporary housing on the co-op site.

While the co-op promises Ruamjai residents a new lease on life, the road has been long and difficult. The first eviction notice came in 1992. "When we tried to negotiate the landlord took us to court to enforce the eviction," says Jalan. Their legal avenues exhausted, the people of Ruamjai were told to pack up and leave in May. "We asked the landlord to give us two more weeks because our new land wasn't ready but she refused." Unable to leave, the families moved into temporary shelters they hastily built just 50 metres away on land owned by the Bangkok Metropolitan Authority. In all, the landlord compensated the community just 40,000 Baht ($2,000 CDN).

Jalan was seven years old when his family moved to Ruamjai in 1960. For 29 years Jalan has watched this small farm community become a bustling downtown neighbourhood lost among Bangkok's sprawling urban landscape. Today, his family can only watch helplessly as work crews carve away the last vestiges of Ruamjai life. "Early this morning, I awoke to the sounds of heavy machinery tearing up the road. I ran to my window to see what was happening but before we could react there was a loud noise. The back hoe had broken our water line. Now we have no water and the road to our homes is gone."

Despite the hardships, Jalan says his heart will be heavy the day he leaves Ruamjai for the last time. The place he is moving to is foreign to him and, in a city famous for its traffic jams, will add another two hours to his already long commute to work. "When we picked the new land for the co-op three years ago, I felt it was very remote in the countryside, not close to anything. But there are factories with jobs for our people." The co-op is near Bang Plee New Town, a new high-density village with many apartment buildings and homes. Bang Plee holds the promise of jobs and there are schools, hospitals and services nearby. Jalan now sees a good life in the future and is eager to build a new community without fear of eviction, on land the co-op can call its own.

"Building housing co-ops in Bangkok is an uphill battle," says former BTA director Dr. Chamniern Paul Vorratchaiphan. It begins by organizing families to create a savings group to pool their modest resources. After lengthy negotiations for a government loan they must find and purchase a piece of affordable land, negotiate with their landlord for compensation and time to remain in their homes until the new land is ready, prepare the land for building and move into temporary housing during construction. There are now 29 housing co-operatives at various stages of development in this city of 8 million. With technical and financial support from CCA, the Building Together Association (BTA) brings government, housing groups, and development agencies together to educate them about the housing situation and to advance co-op housing solutions among the estimated 1,500 slum communities in the greater Bangkok area. Vorratchaiphan says a newly formed Housing Co-operative Federation plays an important role training members and coordinating and negotiating with concerned agencies for support. It is a welcome ally in securing Muang Mai Phattana Co-op's new home.

Jalan has found the obstacles are not always financial in nature. This year, torrential rains, as well as heated resistance from the National Housing Authority (NHA), caused further setbacks and delays. In the spring, co-op members literally had to find their way across troubled waters - waters which threatened to flood their land. "We got together and built a bridge over the canal that separates our land from Bang Plee New Town," says Jalan. "Then we applied for a second loan to add landfill to prepare the site for construction." The NHA, which controls the loan fund, stonewalled Muang Mai's attempts to prepare the land and on one occasion arrested and charged their workers with trespassing. Co-op leaders took their complaints to the central government and eventually persuaded NHA to drop the charges and let the work resume.

The co-op then tried to get permission to use a road which runs through NHA land right to the co-op site. The NHA refused. The move effectively barred co-op members from accessing their own land. Far from discouraged, Muang Mai members have emerged from setbacks like these battle-hardened and more determined to succeed than ever. "Sometimes we must fight very hard and sometimes we must withdraw to negotiate," says Jalan. "We are gradually winning the support of the Ministry and now the NHA is not so quick to block our efforts." By applying pressure through UCDO, Muang Mai won temporary access to move onto their land this June. "Once we are on the land we will be very powerful."

Muang Mai Phattana Co-op will bring families from two long-standing slum communities to live together in a new way. At first, the members from Ruamjai knew little about their new neighbours from Bangna. But after attending several joint seminars they are very close and plans to move to their new homes are in full swing. "We will build a child care centre and open a shop for our members," says Jalan. "And the co-op will give loans to help members improve their lives. But for now, we have more pressing concerns." The co-op is arranging financing for construction and must build more temporary houses. It must arrange for electricity and get the government to approve the land plots for each home. Jalan has already asked his boss for a truck to move everybody and their belongings to the co-op. "It will take us one or two days to move using a van. We will use whatever material we have on hand to build our new shelters and buy the rest from the market."

Jalan now squats on the narrow wooden bridge gazing out over the co-op site. He sees beyond the solitary tree standing amidst the barren clumps of earth. He sees the future and it is moving toward him. After a long pause he remarks. "It won't be long now before we move into our new homes." Breaking into a broad grin he swings around and adds "...and we won't have to move again!"

Korea

NACF Acts as NGO for the World Food Summit

The National Agricultural Co-operative Federation of Korea has taken part in various international activities relating to the World Food Summit to be held in Rome, Italy during November this year. The NACF has assisted in merging co-operatives' view in the drafting of the Policy Statement and Plan of Action.

Churll-Hee Won, Chairman and President of NACF, delivered a special speech entitled 'Food Security and Family Farming' at the meeting of the ICA Committee on Agriculture for Asia and Pacific in Malaysia.

NACF was represented at the World Farmers' Congress in Versailles organised by IFAP in April this year and at the Spring NGO meeting for Asia and Pacific in Bangkok. It also participated at the FAO Regional Conference in Apia, West Samoa in May and intends to send representatives to attend the general meeting of ICA-ICAO, the World Family Farmers' Summit and the World Food Summit in Rome in November.

Russia

Consumer Co-ops in Russia

In August Centrosoyus of the Russian Federation invited ICA's European Chairman, Lars Hillbom, and Director-General, Bruce Thordarson, for a week-long study visit to see the current situation facing consumer co-operatives in Russia.

During visits with regional co-operative leaders in Novgorod in the north and Krasnodar in the south, the ICA officials were able to see at first-hand the role which co-operatives are playing in providing basic food stuffs to some 55 million people in the rural areas and small towns. However, given the falling income levels in these areas, and the need to sell goods on credit, few rural co-operatives are able to be profitable these days. As a result, the consumer co-operatives continue to rely on various forms of state assistance through annual agreements at national and regional levels.

The ICA officials concluded that this support was fully justified during this transition stage in the Russian economy, although it must be accompanied by continued efforts to improve the managerial efficiency and member participation in the co-operatives. In follow-up letters to the Russian President, Prime Minister, and Chairman of the State Duma, they requested early passage of amendments to the current law on consumer co-operatives, which would prevent the sell-off of co-operative property by ensuring that co-operative property belongs to the co-operatives as juridical persons, as is now allowed under the new Russian Civil Code.

Switzerland

25 years of Environmental Concern

Protection of the environment has been included in the statutes of Coop Switzerland since 1973. Since then, priorities have been defined, directives have been given and plans are now implemented, designed to preserve water resources, reduce packaging and energy consumption, eliminate CFCs, collect used batteries, promote recycling, and introduce into the Co-op stores a wide range of ecological products.

Coop Switzerland has engaged in an extensive education campaign. It recognizes that environmental protection can only begin by individual awareness. Safeguarding the environment is the concern for every one. Information material, such as brochures, pamphlets and colouring books for children have therefore been produced and articles regularly appear in the Coop's weekly magazine (in French, German and Italian) as well as in a magazine designed for staff with environmental responsibilities - Coop Ecorama.

Environmental logos provide quick and easily recognizable information to consumers. These include for non-food items, CoopNaturaline and CoopECOplan and food items CoopNATURAplan indicating organic production.

Coop Switzerland has published an Environment Report for 1995 tracing how it has realized its commitment to the environment over the last 25 years. Copies are available in French and German from Coop Switzerland, Public Relations, Postfach 2550, 4002, Basel, Switzerland.

World Bank Accord with OCB/ICA

ICA and OCB have signed an agreement with the World Bank to finance projects aimed at small Brazilian producers in the co-operative sector. As per the agreement, resources will be transferred to co-operatives in the states where the project is to be developed. Their federations will be in charge of providing technical assistance, input distribution, marketing and credit for the production and agricultural industries.

USA/Brazil Co-operative Venture

Blue Diamond, one of the largest US co-operatives engaged in the commercialization of almonds and nuts sent a mission to Brazil last July to formalize an agreement with OCB/ICA. The project includes research, planting systematization, technology and commercialization of cashew and Brazil nuts.

New On the ICA WEB

The ICA Web Site has recently launched pages in Spanish, French and German which can be accessed at <http://www.coop.org>. Please inform the Communications Department of any new co-operative sites in English, French, Spanish and German so that these can be added to the site and advertised in the ICA News.

UWCC & ICA Partnership

University of Wisconsin Co-operative Center has been incorporating the Internet into its co-operative outreach and extension work for over two years. Since the beginning the UWCC has been working with the International Co-operative Alliance, Geneva, and Director of Communications, Mary Treacy.

Since the visit of Ms Treacy in November 1995 and after sharing the Internet projects of ICA and UWCC with representatives of the Madison-area co-operative organizations, the UWCC and ICA have worked out a more formal agreement for collaborating. ICA will continue to provide information from its members for inclusion in the Co-operative Gopher, which is a searchable database of articles and information. UWCC will set up and maintain ICA databases on the Gopher and provide technical assistance.

The UWCC Co-operative Gopher can be reached at gopher://wiscinfo.wisc.edu:70/11/info-source/coop. The information is also available through the web sites maintained by ICA (<http://www.coop.org>) and UWCC (<http://www.wisc.edu/uwcc>).

ICA to Extend Collaboration

ICA intends to extend its collaboration in 1997 to include projects with other universities and organisations.

In 1996, besides working with the University of Wisconsin, ICA has been collaborating with a number of organisations including the UK Society of Co-operative Studies and the University of Leicester, helping to develop their presence on the Internet and publicize their activities.

In 1997 the ICA will collaborate extensively with the University of Saskatchewan Centre for the Study of Co-operatives on a new project to develop the multimedia potential of the Internet to promote the Co-operative Image.

A project with the University of Moncton in Canada to set up a French Data Bank of ICA Statistics on the Web is also planned for next year and the ICA has recently had discussions with Marcel Roy, Chaire de Coopération at the University of Quebec, to discuss possible joint ventures.

INTERNATIONAL CO-OPERATIVE ALLIANCE

Issue No 3/1996

Editor: Mary Treacy

“Co-ops Achieved Most of Habitat II Agenda on a Micro Level”

The Habitat Agenda adopted by governments at the United Nations Conference on Human Settlement in Istanbul last month is the most comprehensive statement of recognition of the co-operative contribution to sustainable development yet issued by the UN system. With nearly twenty references to possible partnerships with governments and civil society in all sectors that will lead to healthier, safer and sustainable urban settlements, the document will be a tool for the co-operative movement to use to forge new partnerships and strengthen existing ones.

Rolf Trodin, President of ICA Housing, presented the ICA statement during the Plenary session of Habitat II on 7 June 1996. He noted that the co-operative principles and values address many of the goals of the conference and that the co-operative movement continues to successfully meet the challenges and concerns to which Habitat II was now drawing world attention.

He stressed that, “...in realising the agenda of Habitat II, national governments are more likely to find inspiration in the co-op housing model than in any other housing option. We have achieved most of the agenda already on a micro level.

Rolf Trodin addresses the Plenary session of Habitat II in Istanbul.

At the international level, the co-op movement has an ongoing history of bringing together the northern and southern co-op sectors for their mutual benefit. Co-op housing has the answer to many of human beings' deepest needs: for shelter, for community, for control over their own lives, for values. We urge those leaders present at Habitat II to work with the co-op housing movement in seeking out development partnerships, which can solve their shelter problem by giving citizens access to the one form of housing that offers more than just a place to live.”

Co-operators from around the world joined the ICA in making sure that the governments were aware of the important contribution of the housing co-operative movement. Co-operators from Austria, Canada, Chile, Czech Republic, Kenya, Germany, India, Norway, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom, Uruguay, USA, Zambia, and Zimbabwe also attended the conference and the parallel events held at the NGO Forum.

ICA Housing Co-operatives held both a Board meeting and General Assembly in Istanbul allowing many of their members the opportunity to participate in the numerous events and meetings taking place during Habitat II. Many reported having been able to make excellent contacts. A special seminar on movement-to-movement assistance was also held attracting participants from national delegations and the NGO community.

A number of stands showing the successes of the co-operative movement were also put up at the NGO Forum including the ICA Housing photo exhibit on movement-to-movement assistance.

Co-operative Housing Foundation (USA) and a number of Turkish co-operative organizations including Kent-Koop, Turkkent, Taris, Union of Bornova Housing Co-operatives, also had stands.

The Turkish Housing Co-operative Movement also held seminars to present their successes and challenges for the future.

Co-operative Initiatives Receive “Best Practices” Recognition

Launched by the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements as part of the preparatory process for Habitat II, “the City Summit”, the Best Practices Initiative aimed to forge a positive vision of the urbanizing world by focusing attention on practical solutions to some of the most pressing social, economic and environmental problems.

Over 600 entries were submitted from 90 countries. The top twelve entries received awards with a further 100 entries put on the “Best 100 List” and others considered to be “Good Practices”.

Co-operatives were prominent in the entries. Each initiative was judged on its impact, partnerships, and sustainability. In addition, criteria regarding leadership, transparency, empowerment of people and responsiveness of social and cultural diversity, potential for replicability, and appropriateness to the local conditions.

SEWA, the Self Employed Women’s Bank, established by the co-operative and trade union movements in India was one of the award winners for its success in providing loans at market rates to women who would otherwise not have access to credit.

In the “Best 100 List”, co-operative initiatives in Brazil, China, Costa Rica, Egypt, Germany, Norway, Pakistan and Venezuela were selected. Other co-operative initiatives were considered to be “Good practices”.

For further information on the initiatives see <http://www.bestpractices.org>.

COPAC Secretariat Transfers to Geneva

The Committee for the Promotion and Advancement of Co-operatives (COPAC) officially established its office in Geneva on April 1, 1996. Ms. Maria Elena Chavez has been appointed COPAC coordinator. Ms. Vittoria Zaffarano, the COPAC office manager will assist the coordinator during 1996 until the full transfer of the COPAC office from Rome is completed.

COPAC was established in Rome in 1971 to improve the coordination of members' activities for the promotion of co-operatives. Its present membership includes the Food and Agricultural Organization of the UN (FAO), International Labour Organization (ILO), the International Federation of Agricultural Producers (IFAP), International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco, and Allied Workers' Associations (IUF), World Council of Credit Unions (WOCCU) and the ICA.

The COPAC coordinator can be contacted at the ICA Head Office; telephone: (41-22) 929 88 25; E-mail: icageneva@gn.apc.org. Further information about COPAC and its members can be found on the ICA/UWCC Co-operative Gopher (gopher://wiscinfo.wisc.edu:70/11/.info-source/.coop) or on the ICA International Web Site (<http://www.coop.org>).

New ICA Organisation

At the June meeting, the ICA Board received a report from the Interim Steering Committee established to finalise plans to create the International Health Co-operative Organisation (IHCO) as an ICA Specialised Organisation. The Board approved the draft rules of the new Organisation, which plans to hold its founding meeting on 22 November to coincide with the Regional Assembly for the Americas. The new body will promote health co-ops of three kinds: consumer- and user-owned, and integrated forms. Only members of ICA will be eligible for full membership, although a category of associate membership will also be available for others. ICA Head Office will provide the secretary for the IHCO.

Asia-Pacific Regional Assembly

The first ICA Regional Assembly of 1996 was held in Petaling Jaya, Malaysia, from 13-14 June under the chairmanship of Royal Professor Ungku A. Aziz, President of the National Co-operative Organisation of Malaysia, ANGKASA.

Among the agenda issues dealt with by the 180 participants were:

- * approval of a new four-year development plan (1997-2000) for the Regional Office;
- * review of the report of the advisory committee on the policy and direction of the Regional Office, which recommended that efforts be focussed in the areas of improving the business efficiency of co-operatives, human resource development, and improvement of co-operatives' image and relations with government;
- * approval of a model constitution for adoption by Specialised Regional Committees;

- * establishment of two working groups to draw up guidelines for the establishment of regional housing and women's committees;
- * reports on national progress in publicising and using the Co-operative Identity Statement;
- * preparations for the next meeting of Co-operative Ministers and leaders, scheduled to be held in Thailand in March 1997;
- * acceptance of the offer by Bangladesh to host the 1998 Regional Assembly.

The participants also decided that the nomination of a candidate for election as ICA Vice-President would be postponed until the March 1997 meeting of the regional Executive Council.

In his opening address to the Assembly, ICA President Graham Melmoth noted that the rapid growth of economies and co-operative movements in the Asia-Pacific region had generated both opportunities and anxieties.

Referring to the wish expressed by some Asian members for greater representation on the ICA Board, and for retaining a larger percentage of subscription payments for use in the region, he said that both issues are being examined within the global ICA context by the Special Board Committee on Rules and Finance, which will present its proposals for change to the 1997 General Assembly.

At the conclusion of the Assembly Mr. Melmoth paid tribute to the retiring Regional Director, G.K. Sharma, for the progress made by ICA in the region during the last nine years, and introduced the newly-appointed Regional Director, Robby Tulus of Indonesia, who will take up his position on 1 October.

Colombia - Recycling Co-operative Offers New Beginnings

by John Julian

At 16, Nellie was in big trouble. She was pregnant, illiterate, unskilled, and she had two children under the age of two. Her husband, a thief, was failing in his chosen profession, her parents were dead, and the children were hungry. In Buccaramanga, Colombia, Nellie's options were limited.

Desperate, Nellie made her way to the edge of the city, and with her two tiny children, walked down the dusty gravel road to the municipal garbage dump. For Nellie, and others who have passed that way before and since, it is a long, hot walk into hell.

The dump is situated on a relatively flat piece of land surrounded on three sides by hills. Chulos — a type of vulture — wheel overhead or cluster on the ground, feeding on the garbage. Scattered on the hills around are little makeshift shelters of sticks and tattered plastic and cardboard — home to as many as 200 people who survive by scavenging in the dump. When garbage trucks rumble in, the people emerge through the billowing clouds of dust to swarm over the piles, pulling out glass or plastic — anything saleable. Most carry knives to cut up plastic and to defend themselves from each other. When the human population at the dump gets too large, civic minded citizens have been known to shoot them. Nor do the authorities pay much heed if the dump dwellers kill each other. There are just two rules to follow at the dump — the law of the jungle, and the code of silence.

"We were desechables," says Nellie, "the disposable ones. No one ever went to jail for killing one of us. I was no better than an animal." Like Nellie, all the people who find their way to the dump teeter precariously on the bottom rung of society. Many are alcoholic, and others addicted to basuko, a by-product of cocaine that is cheap, highly addictive, damaging to those who use it, and readily available throughout Colombia.

Nellie's immediate concern on her arrival, and during much of the four years she spent in the dump, was food. If she and her children found bottles or plastic, they often traded with others who had found food in the mounds of refuse. Chulos provided extra protein. Enterprising people would kill the birds and roast them — a simple enough matter in a dump. The rotting garbage provided a ready source of fuel. A deep hole would release enough methane gas for a steady fire. Life in the dump was ugly, violent, and very often short.

Salvation for Nellie and many other dump workers came from an unexpected source. The city of Buccaramanga was planning to close the dump and replace it with a modern landfill. A team of social workers from Santander University were dispatched to look into the problem of the people who lived there. After months of daily visits a co-operative was formed, and for the dump people who joined it was a ticket out of hell. Nellie was among the first to sign up.

Ten years later, little has changed in the dump. But everything has changed for Nellie. Now thirty, and married for the second time to another co-op member, Nellie is a senior member of the co-operative. Her job these days is as a supervisor at the co-op's recycling facility.

There, workers sort and package a wide range of products for resale. And while they may still be working in the same industry as they did during their days in the dump, the recycling facility might as well be on another planet.

The workers wear neat uniforms — green to symbolize hope. To be a member of the co-operative a new recruit must be free of drugs and alcohol. The facility is orderly and businesslike, and at the end of the month there is a steady pay cheque of between 250,000 and 300,000 pesos, approximately $500 to $600 Canadian dollars.

The recycling facility is not the only business that the co-operative is involved in. The co-op members, now more than 130 strong, clean buildings throughout the city. They run a restaurant, and have contracts to sweep city streets. Others go door to door, collecting recyclable products in the suburbs. There is a co-op run restaurant at the city's gigantic new bus terminal. And in one of the poorer barrios of the city there is a daycare centre where more than 60 children, dressed in carefully laundered white shorts and T-shirts, spend their days learning and singing and playing. Without the co-operative, their fate would certainly have been that of the hard eyed, dirty children that can still be found growing up in the horror of the dump.

The members of the co-operative are proud and independent. Their co-operative has never received assistance from government. Starting with capital of less than $100 they have grown, in 10 years, to own the buildings that house the recycling plant and the daycare centre. They own two trucks and a variety of other pieces of equipment, and they have provided themselves with employment and a new life.

The university which was instrumental in establishing the co-operative has maintained its ties, and the co-operative is a member of ASCOOP, the national association of co-operatives in Colombia. Through ASCOOP the co-operative is part of a program, funded by the Canadian Co-operative Association, that provides skilled technical assistance and credit. They have had help from ASCOOP business specialists and auditors, and are about to receive a loan to buy a machine to compress and bale cardboard. Money for the recycling co-op's part of the program was contributed by St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Good Neighbour Fund, of Ottawa, Ontario.

Nellie and her new husband have bought their own house. They now have two more children, and the family owns a shiny new motorbike. After years of attending school on Saturdays, Nellie has completed the first levels of high school. A measure of the respect she has earned in the co-operative is the fact that she has been assigned the duty of working with new recruits. When they arrive fresh from the dump, Nellie helps them to adjust to the discipline of an ordered and regulated working life.

She has never had to refuse a new recruit entry into the co-operative. By the time they complete their three-month trial, the recruits know for themselves whether they belong or not. Long before the trial period is over, those who cannot conform, who cannot contain their violence, or for whom the pull of basuko or alcohol is still too strong, usually drift back to the dump.

Nellie has another important responsibility with the co-operative. She supervises the co-op members who return to the dump as buyers to purchase products for the recycling facility. For many co-op members, this job would be impossible. They have escaped the fate that awaited them in the dump, and they cannot bear to tempt that fate by once again travelling down that dusty, litter-strewn road.

On a sunny day in March, Nellie makes one of her visits to the dump. The chulos swoop and swirl as she is greeted warmly by a growing crowd of children and adults, caked with dirt and dressed in an odd assortment of cast-off clothes. They press in around her to exchange greetings.

Nellie stops to talk to a tiny, baby-faced 13-year-old. The girl is small because she has lived most of her life in the dump. She has never had adequate nutrition. Already she has two children, and according to Nellie, is passed around from man to man like a piece of communal property. As Nellie turns away a look of terrible sadness comes over her face. She sits rigidly in the van, and as the vehicle begins to move she looks neither left nor right, and certainly not back. Just straight ahead down the narrow road to redemption.

The co-operative daycare centre provides security for more than 60 children.

Gender Issues in Co-operatives

Congress Adopts New Policies

The UK Co-operative Congress, Harrogate, UK, 1996, endorsed the statement on gender equality adopted by the European Regional Assembly of the ICA. The congress particularly noted the need to encourage societies to commit themselves to the active promotion of equality between men and women; the different priorities of values, strengths and competence between men and women and ensure equality of participation, job opportunities and working conditions as well as equal access to training and education opportunities.

The Congress urged co-ops to set and publicise action plans which include targets for achievement and timescales, in order to achieve the above objectives.

Gender Project to Improve Efficiency and Job Satisfaction

Folksam Insurance, Sweden has established a project 'Gender Perspectives on Skills and Qualifications in the Claims Adjusters' Work'.

In the project, one female and one male group of claims adjusters describe and analyse, together as well as in separate groups, different forms of knowledge, skills and qualifications in their work. One female and one male researcher will also attend meetings and analyse the discussions. Seminars with guest researchers will be held in between the group work. There will be five seminars and five group meetings during 1996.

Issues discussed at the meetings and seminars will be: what is knowledge? What kind of knowledge is valued and not valued? What kind of knowledge is important in the claims adjusters' work? How important is knowledge of human nature? female and male language - are there any differences in female and male adjusters' contacts with clients and colleagues? Female and male definitions of efficiency, service and quality in the work - do female and male clients have different demands and preferences with regards to the adjuster's sex?

The aim is to improve efficiency, quality and work satisfaction by widening and combining gender perspectives. The results will be used as a basis in forming a gender neutral job evaluation and salary setting system in the company.

Perhaps this example may inspire similar projects in other co-ops!

Network on Women in Co-ops

An electronic discussion group on women in co-operatives and credit unions has been launched by the Canadian Co-operative Association (CCA), known as 'WICEN'. It is open to anyone who has an Internet e-mail address. Upon becoming a member, all conference comments and postings will arrive automatically in your e-mail box. WICEN will provide a forum for exchange of ideas, experiences and information and a place to pose questions or propose solutions; a place to share 'best practices' and case studies and to make new contact. The focus of discussions will be on issues relating to women and co-operatives - issues such as women's involvement on boards of directors and in decision-making within co-operatives and credit unions; family-friendly policies and practices in co-ops; women and co-op development; leadership styles and marketing to women.

WICEN is open to members of co-ops and credit unions and not restricted to women only. It is open to anyone with an interest in the subject of women and co-ops.

To join the conference, one needs to subscribe on line through e-mail to wicen-request@usask.ca. Please mention in your e-mail : `subscribe wicen <your e-mail address>`.

Youth and Co-operatives

Canada Hosts Two Youth Forums

The Co-operators Insurance Group has launched a youth unity project which will provide a forum for 100 Canadian youths (aged 18-21) to explore, express and listen to diverse views on Canadian unity at Hull, Ottawa, from August 17-23, 1996. Further information, posters and application forms can be obtained from Laura Gregson, The Co-operators, Priory Square, Guelph, Ontario N1H 6P8, or on Internet home page (<http://www.cooperators.ca/cooperators/>).

The Canadian Co-operative Association (CCA) also organized a Youth Conference in Halifax June 24-25 where Canadians, Colombians, Indonesians and Filipinos learnt about co-ops in Canada and provided input on how to increase youth involvement in co-ops. Check the Web site for more information about youth initiatives (<http://www.cca.usask.ca/CCA/CCA.Home.html>)

Sustainable Development

Congress Adopts New Policies

The UK Co-operative Congress in Harrogate noted the enthusiasm of the Co-operative Movement for sustainable energy policies and called for co-operative initiatives to assess the feasibility of developing renewable energy schemes in Northern Ireland.

The Congress also declared that Co-operation is, by its nature, rooted in community spirit. Therefore, the congress called upon all member societies to publicise their support for their society's community involvement.

Co-op Agenda 21

ICA has just released the printed copy of the Co-op Agenda 21 which will be available from MariaElena Chavez at the ICA Head Office. The text is also available on the ICA/UWCC Co-operative Gopher (gopher:/wiscinfo.wisc.edu:70/11/info-source/coop) or on the ICA Web Site (<http://www.coop.org>).

New business and ecology centre was opened on 22 March with the help of Terry Thomas, Managing Director of the Co-operative Bank, the Right Honourable Tony Blair MP and Cherie Blair, Phil Barton, Director of the National Centre for Business and Ecology, and representatives from the universities, Professors Tom Husband, Bob Boucher, Martin Harris and Sir Kenneth Greeb.

Co-operative Bank's Ecology Mission Statement

"We, the Co-operative Bank, will continue to develop our business taking into account the impact our activities have on the environment and society at large.

The nature of our activities are such that our direct impact, by being selective in terms of the provision of finance and banking arrangements, is more ecologically significant than the direct impact of our trading operations.

However, we undertake to continually assess all our activities and implement a programme of ecological improvement based on the pursuit of the following four scientific principles:

1. Nature cannot withstand a progressive build-up of waste derived from the Earth's crust.
2. Nature cannot withstand a progressive build-up of society's waste, particularly artificial persistent substances which it cannot degrade into harmless materials.
3. The productive area of nature must not be diminished in quality (diversity) or quantity (volume) and must be enabled to grow.
4. Society must utilise energy and resources in a sustainable, equitable and efficient manner.

We consider that the pursuit of these principles constitute a path of ecological excellence and will secure future prosperity for society by sustainable economic activity.

The Co-operative Bank will not only pursue the above path itself, but endeavour to help and encourage all its stakeholders to do likewise."

Co-op People

New Appointments at ICA

During the ICA Board meeting in June, Director-General Bruce Thordarson announced two secondments, one new appointment, and one promotion within the Head Office staff structure, and a change of Regional Director in Asia.

Mats Ahnlund, Director-General of the Co-op Network for Co-operative Development in Eastern and Central Europe, joined ICA as Senior Adviser, Member Services in July. He will also serve as focal point for liaison with the Specialised Organisations.

MariaElena Chavez, currently ICA's UN Liaison Officer, will be promoted to Director of UN/NGO Relations.

Bjorn Genberg, currently head of the Nordic co-operative development programme in Kenya with the Swedish Co-operative Centre, will join ICA as Development Director in January 1997.

Won-Sik Noh, senior agricultural economist with the National Agricultural Co-operative Federation of South Korea, will join the ICA as Agricultural Co-operative Adviser in August 1996.

Bruce Thordarson described these changes as a result of the Board's planning session in December 1995. At that time the Board emphasised the need to diversify and improve services to Member Organisations and the Specialised Bodies, to strengthen the Development Programme with special attention to Africa, and to ensure that the Head Office is sufficiently strong to balance the centrifugal forces resulting from the new regional structure.

At the ICA Regional Office for Asia and the Pacific, Robby Tulus of Indonesia has been appointed Regional Director, effective 1 October 1996. A founder of the credit union movement in Indonesia, he subsequently served as Asia Regional Manager for the Canadian Co-operative Association. During the last three years he has been Senior Policy Adviser in the Regional Office.

The retiring Regional Director, G.K. Sharma, will assume the function of Special Advisor to the Director-General, with particular responsibility for issues dealing with co-op legislation and government policy.

Giancarlo Pasquini has been elected member of the Upper House of the Italian Senate, and has resigned from the post of Lega Chairman and also from the ICA Board. The new Lega Chairman is Ivano Barberini.

David Allonby OBE, a director of the Co-operative Wholesale Society and member of the CWS Surrey and Berkshire Branch Committee, has been appointed Chairman of the Co-operative Union, the Co-operative Movement's central organising and advisory body in the United Kingdom. He succeeds George Money, who has retired.

Obituary

Dr. Jacobo Laks, President of the ICA Sub-Regional Banking Committee for Latin America and the President of the Instituto Movilizador de Fondos Cooperativos died on May 7th, 1996. Dr Laks was a great supporter of ICA and was instrumental in the development of co-operatives in Argentina.

Co-operatives and Habitat II

The co-operative movement contributes to the goals of Habitat II by creating key partnerships with governments and all sectors of the civil society in improving environmental, social, economic and political conditions in human settlements.

The Habitat II Draft Global Plan of Action acknowledges the relevance of co-operatives in supporting the goals of creating employment, providing affordable and quality housing, providing access to credit and financial services, promoting social integration and in contributing to the economic and social development of women through their participation in co-operatives.

Housing co-operatives provide communities with access to affordable housing, security of tenure, and quality housing. They contribute to promoting safe and secure communities, control over urban and rural planning and environmental management. Co-operatives demonstrate, through practical application, the principles of democratic governance and individual responsibility.

Housing co-operatives have been able to achieve these objectives in a variety of ways through partnerships with government and the civil society, as illustrated by the following examples:

* In Canada, the Co-operative Housing Foundation tackled the problem of domestic violence within housing co-operatives by sensitizing members and working with local governments and women's associations.

* The German Housing Co-operative Ludwig-Frank of Mannheim brought together low income families from 15 countries, to work in partnership with the Municipality of Mannheim to restore their block of 400 apartments. The co-operative was honoured with a World Habitat Award in 1992.

* In Turkey, the Batikent Project was launched in 1979 by Kent-Koop (Union of Batikent Housing Construction Co-operatives) under the leadership of the Metropolitan Municipality of Ankara. It was the first mass housing project to demonstrate the success of public and private partnerships in the housing field in Turkey. Batikent was a pioneer in bringing low income people together in co-operatives, through the workers' unions or according to their place of work, to decide for themselves about the type, size and number of units in their housing projects. Housing "by the people and for the people" has had an impact on the housing shortage in Turkey and has kept down the sale and rental prices in the Ankara housing market. Today, 190,000 persons live in 43,000 housing units at Batikent.

Co-operatives also transfer know-how through technical co-operation especially with regard to housing co-operative activities. For example:

* In Zambia, the Norwegian housing co-operative movement (NBBL) in collaboration with Human Settlements of Zambia

74th International Co-operative Day

(Saturday, 6 July 1996)

Message from the International Co-operative Alliance

Co-operatives for Sustainable Development

The potential of co-operative enterprises to contribute to the alleviation of poverty through the creation of employment and to satisfy certain of society's needs more effectively than either public or private profit-making enterprises have been widely recognised by the United Nations.

One of the ways in which the UN demonstrated this recognition was by declaring, in 1995, that the International Day of Co-operatives should be celebrated every year by Governments in collaboration with their national co-operative movements. In 1996, as the International Community celebrates the Year for the Eradication of Poverty, the UN will again draw the attention of Governments to the significant contribution of co-operatives to reducing poverty and to the need to form partnerships with the Movement.

Co-operatives have always had an impact in the communities in which they operate. Working at the grass-roots level they help to bring about sustainable development in the community by empowering their members. The member movements of the International Co-operative Alliance also act globally through their apex organisation and have thus won increased recognition at the international level for their valuable contribution to the achievement of the economic, social and environmental goals of the United Nations.

Concern for Community, a new Co-operative Principle reflecting the impact co-operatives have in contributing to sustainable development within communities, was added to the guiding principles of the International Co-operative Movement in the new Statement of the Co-operative Identity adopted at the Centennial Congress and General Assembly of the International Co-operative Alliance in September, 1995.

Some of the Co-operative Principles have changed little since the movement began over 150 years ago. The first three Principles: Voluntary and Open Membership, Democratic Member Control, and Member Economic Participation are the foundations on which the modern movement was built. Principle four, Autonomy and Independence, has been proven as a necessary ingredient in societies where governments have formerly used co-operatives to enforce their own development programmes and economic plans often to the detriment of the co-operative values of self-help and responsibility. Principle five, Education, Training and Information, has been acknowledged as being of primordial importance, not only for the co-operative members and elected representatives, managers and employees, but also for society at large, especially for those who govern societies, for opinion leaders and for the young people who will become the co-operators of tomorrow.

Co-operative Solidarity, or as stated in the sixth Principle of the Statement of Co-operative Identity, Co-operation between Co-operatives, is the potential strength of the international co-operative movement. It is a principle which is becoming increasingly important in the face of the contemporary global economic, social and political trends which societies everywhere are facing.

The International Co-operative Alliance calls upon its more than 760,000,000 members at grassroots level, and also upon co-operative enterprises and organisations at local, regional and national level, to consider not only how to improve their own situation, but also to devote significant energy to promoting new co-operative enterprises in their own and related fields.

The ICA moreover calls upon its member organisations and specialised organisations in the fields of agriculture, banking, consumer co-operation, energy, fisheries, health, housing, insurance, trade, tourism and industrial and artisanal production, as well as its committees working in the fields of communications, human resource development, co-operative research and the promotion of equal opportunities for women in co-operatives, to work together to build a strong, united movement which can help make tomorrow's world a better place for future generations.

Co-op Housing - An Effective Approach to Meeting Global Housing Needs

As resources for housing services become more scarce, new approaches to co-operative housing are emerging to maximize capital and human investments. In developing economies and emerging democracies in particular, co-operative housing provides a rational and dynamic framework within which public and private resources are brought to bear in a cost effective manner.

For the past 44 years, the Cooperative Housing Foundation (CHF) of the United States has worked at the grassroots, municipal, and national levels and with key elements of civil society to promote co-operative and community development in more than 90 countries worldwide. CHF has built on this experience and on time-tested co-operative principles to develop pragmatic, innovative, private-sector assistance directed at co-operative and economic development, human settlements and planning. CHF's promotion of market-based co-operative development, credit and finance, jobs creation, institution building and policy formulation enables families to live in better, healthier and cleaner environments.

While national policies and systems do provide the necessary framework to improve the delivery of affordable housing, CHF has found that large-scale policy reforms are most effective when accompanied and reinforced by a tangible demonstration of their potential benefits. Co-operatives provide a way to bring about positive and visible change at the grassroots, "consumer" level. Demonstration projects organized around co-operative principles can increase the magnitude of those changes and positively impact the society at large. This philosophy, rooted in the basic tenets of the co-operative movement, has enabled CHF to successfully implement a wide range of activities throughout the world. CHF is currently active in more than 30 countries in Africa, Asia, the Middle East, Central/Eastern Europe and the NIS region, Latin America and the Caribbean. CHF's projects have varied in scope from creating small home-improvement co-operatives in Ecuador and Paraguay, to assisting in such watershed events as helping South African authorities incorporate co-operative housing into the country's new social housing strategy and establishing the first housing co-operatives in Poland to successfully secure commercial US-style mortgages.

In Ecuador and Paraguay, CHF is working to strengthen the role of co-operatives in meeting the shelter needs of low-income families. CHF is providing technical assistance to credit unions and co-operative members in implementing lending programmes. With this assistance, low-income families are able to build a new house or make significant home improvements.

In South Africa, CHF is helping to introduce co-operative housing to assist the large numbers of South Africans previously disenfranchised and excluded from the formal housing delivery system. The programme is based on community involvement and incorporates co-operative mechanisms which have not been widely used in South Africa. CHF is mobilizing local resources to implement a co-operative housing project in the city of Port Elizabeth which will provide a model for replication throughout the country.

CHF's co-operative development project in Poland provides another kind of model which "activates" policy reform to produce real and replicable results at the local level. Since 1990, CHF has assisted in developing market-oriented, private capacity for housing delivery. All houses are built from the private funds of local co-operative

Uruguay Families Find Shelter Thanks to the Solidarity of Swedish Co-operators

Rolf Trodin discusses plans with project architect.

Uruguay was once known as the Switzerland of Latin America. It was a rich country and a great place in which to live. But that was a long time ago. The country suffered economic problems which eventually led to a military dictatorship. Uruguay is once again a democracy but there is still much poverty due to unemployment and the galloping inflation of the 1970s and 80s.

There are two co-operative housing federations in Uruguay: Fucvam and Fecovi. Both function effectively on small resources and are dependent on financial aid from other countries such as Sweden.

One project they have been able to implement with such aid is a joint venture with Swedish co-operators. The project rehoused a group of families living in a shanty town on a small plot of land between a river and a highway. The shanty town comprised about 100 sheds made of anything on which the people could get their hands. Every spring, the river flooded forcing the families out of these makeshift homes to sleep under bridges or to take refuge in other shanty towns nearby.

For years the authorities declared the town a health hazard and barred the families from taking up residence there. However, they did nothing to rehouse these poor people who had nowhere else to go. As one father of five put it: "We know this is not a suitable place to raise children but we have neither land nor money and the banks are unwilling to help us".

Then the Swedish co-operative housing organisation (HSB) came to the rescue. HSB had decided to put aside SEK 2 per member annually for international solidarity work. With 600,000 members, this meant 1.2 million SEK (about US$200,000) per annum.

In Sweden, there is a system of 80-20 projects. This means that if organisations collect 20% of project money from their members, the government development aid agency will match it with the remaining 80%. HSB works through the Swedish Co-operative Centre (SCC). It is an organisation which channels money from all Sweden's co-operative organisations into work with different types of co-operatives in developing countries. By working with SCC the US$200,000 collected by HSB became a million dollars which was used to rehouse the shanty-town dwellers.

Swedish staff and people from Fucvam as well as representatives from the target group met with local authorities and banks and negotiated with the architects, construction material suppliers and others.

The local people formed a co-operative with help and training in co-operative management from HSB, who also transferred their know-how in maintenance and administration. The Swedish organisation paid for architects and building materials while the local municipality agreed to donate a piece of land. With technical training provided by HSB the local people built their own homes and infrastructure starting with a common building to house meeting rooms, a kindergarten and other facilities for the whole community.

Local housing before the project began.

Co-operative/Municipality partnership leads to the re-housing of shanty town dwellers.

While the construction was under way, this building was used as administrative offices, a temporary kindergarten and a kitchen and dining-room for the member workers and their families. When the work is finished they intend to throw a big party and have a lottery to decide which family gets which apartment.

This is an example of a pilot project which shows both the authorities and the local people how co-operatives can successfully help to solve housing problems. In Istanbul during Habitat II, a representative from Fucvam will share his experience with people attending the ICA Housing Seminar.

members, supplemented by mortgage credit obtained through the newly implemented housing finance system in Poland. With this activity, CHF is helping to pioneer ways to develop affordable housing and institutional structures that can be adapted to a new economic order in Poland. Since 1994, production of co-operative housing has been replicated at eleven additional sites. The project demonstrates how co-operative housing operates as a viable, housing delivery system.

Due to their universal nature, co-operative values can be readily applied to many types of organizations including condominium associations, non-governmental and community-based organizations. While CHF assists many different groups with diverse needs, all programmes incorporate the co-operative values of self-help, democracy, equality, equity and solidarity. CHF works with women's groups on social and economic empowerment issues; with informal settlements to improve the urban environment through appropriate technology; with low-income families to marshal their resources effectively through incremental building and affordable credit; and with non-governmental organizations to address local needs for shelter and infrastructure.

CHF promotes the development of co-operatives around the world to serve the needs of communities which do not have access to adequate shelter, encouraging self-reliance, democratic principles and private sector involvement. CHF's work is illustrative of how co-operative values and principles can be incorporated into national policies to satisfy the very basic need of adequate shelter for all.

The Cooperative Housing Foundation (CHF) was established in 1952 as a private, nonprofit organization to help low-income families build better housing and communities.

CHF's Guiding Principles to Development:

- Operate on a business-like, private sector basis
- Reinforce democratic principles at the grassroots level
- Work with local organizations
- Maximize local employment
- Use available, appropriate technologies
- Ensure sustainability through affordability
- Reflect community values and priorities
- Link formal and informal systems
- Emphasize flexibility and responsiveness to bring speedy results
- Enable local community control
- Provide for transparency and mutual accountability
- Build dignity through self-reliance

Co-ops Solve Urban Community Problems in West Germany

Urban unrest characterized the cities of West Germany in the 1980s. Urban planners had disregarded an integral approach to cities, separating business areas and economic and social centres. The housing market could no longer offer affordable housing at a time when unemployment was rising. The squatter movement grew as housing units which had remained empty due to speculation were occupied. Suburban areas too were facing increasing problems including the rise of juvenile delinquency.

The 1980s was characterized by increasing awareness of ecological problems, intensive resistance to nuclear power stations, and the struggle for democratization. In fact, basic democracy became the focus of the social movements of that time. Existing housing co-operatives were able to consolidate and continue their operations for existing members. However, faced with financial limitations reflecting the overall difficulties of the country, they found themselves unable to meet the increasing need for housing.

However, new co-operatives began to emerge in response to new challenges. One group looked at "alternative" housing - common property rights and living space, governance of apartment houses with a communal living perspective, i.e a community based on a wider interpretation of the traditional 2-adults/2-children family. The members of this group also focused attention on how to overcome the separation of paid work, child-education and leisure time. Environmental concerns were given a high priority in forming their housing organizations.

A second group was made up of low-income individuals who formed co-operatives in response to rent-increases, speculative demolition, and the transformation of living areas. They aimed at providing quality, affordable housing, but also had concern for their community. A major focus was contributing to solving social problems.

An example of this type of new co-operative is "Drachenbau eG" (in English: dragons' burrow) which was founded in Hamburg in the early 1980s. The aims of its members were to live together as good neighbours, to overcome human isolation and to provide housing for a variety of households - single people as well as families. Members put the needs of children and developing solidarity and environmental awareness high on their priority list.

Thanks to movement-to-movement technical assistance and partnerships with local government, the co-operative was able to transform an old factory into an apartment building.

Members participated in the work and were able to contract services through a grant and non-interest loan from the Hamburg government and the support of "Stattbau", an agency supported by the local government of Hamburg, which supports self-help-organizations. This dramatically reduced the cost of rebuilding. The co-operative now operates 24 flats for 85 members in four different buildings.

Basic democracy is the operating rule. Co-operative members take decisions by consensus and each one takes on the role of administrator in turn rather than hiring an outside manager. Business surpluses are not used for new buildings but rather collected in a solidarity fund to assist similar projects.

Drachenbau eG members point out that their benefits are not only economic, but also social. Children have the possibility of playing in a safe environment. The feeling of community is strong so, for example, if parents are unable to be home when their children return from school, they know they can count on their neighbours. Similarly, members can count on their neighbours to water plants, care for pets, etc. when they travel. Members have also started a food co-operative. Self-administration is an important learning experience for members of the co-operative, particularly for female members who find this experience empowering. Member participation in reconstruction planning has made it possible to ensure high environmental standards on the micro-level. For example, low levels of toxic construction materials are chosen, rain water basins with water recycling engines have replaced costly municipal water, etc.

This is but one example of how co-operatives in partnership with municipalities have been able to respond to the housing needs of people in urban centres.

Anselm Meyer-Antz, Department of Co-operative Studies, University of Cologne, Germany.

Urban Self-help in Zambia

Up to 1990, Bauleni in S.E. Zambia was an unregulated area where people with poor means had settled. The authorities have since then accepted the settlement, but they have not had the resources to develop any infrastructure or public services. Bad quality housing, poor health conditions, high unemployment, and low income for those lucky enough to have a job, have plagued the area. The residents of Bauleni contacted HUZA* (Human Settlements of Zambia) for support and in 1990 the Project Urban Self-Help was launched. The main objective was to improve living conditions in Bauleni through support to self-help activities that enabled the residents to develop the area. The project is based on community participation at decision-making level, and the work is organised and carried out through different committees such as Bauleni Residents' Committee, the Health and Water Committee and income generating clubs. Successful achievements have made the area attractive to an extent that the population has more than doubled since the project started.

Better Houses and Ventilated Pit Latrines

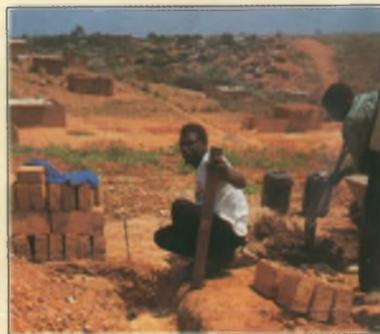

A problem in Bauleni was that houses made of sun-dried clay broke up during the rainy season. Through the project HUZA has introduced new building methods like adding cement in the local clay to strengthen the bricks, and producing rooftiles from local sisal and cement to replace the corrugated ironsheets previously used.

HUZA provides motivation and training in these new building methods, and also cement which people can buy for building their own houses. As a part of the income generating activities HUZA has also trained a group of young men whom the residents can hire to do the work.

A sanitary improvement in the area is the system of pit latrines. When a new house is built, the clay for the bricks is dug out on the plot, sufficient for a round hole, 4-5 m. deep. Here the latrine is built and can be used for about 10 years.

BAULENI URBAN SELF-HELP

Due to the residents' own efforts, Bauleni has become an attractive living area outside Lusaka.

The Bauleni project shows that a lot can be achieved with reasonable economic means, when people participate actively.

Improved Nutrition and Health Conditions

Information and education are given on improving the nutrition and health conditions and courses in family-planning and pre-school activities are also arranged. Together with improved types of latrines and better water drainage systems these activities have increased the awareness of nutrition and health issues. However, these efforts still need to be given priority.

Training for Income Generating Activities

In January 1994 the Bauleni Skills Training Centre was opened to provide training and education in different crafts like carpentry, bricklaying and tailoring. This will be the main factor of economic promotion. A revolving fund has also been established to facilitate investments for working groups.

Roads, Water Drainage, and Water Supply

The dirt roads have been improved by gravel and a new profile to facilitate the evacuation of water. In order to avoid collection of water and rapid streams during the rainy season, comprehensive drainage has been done. The current water supply is insufficient and a new borehole has been constructed.

However, as more than half the population is still without easy access to water, further supply must be a priority.

A Better Environment

Efforts are still necessary to upgrade the area and improve the environment. In addition to the water drainage and the sanitary improvements, the planting of trees and organised garbage collection are important activities which will make the area a nicer place in which to live.

NRD/NORCOOP/HUZA

*HUZA is a non-governmental organisation founded in 1982 to promote self-help, self-reliance for social and economic development in the field of human settlements. HUZAs are funded by the Federation of Norwegian Co-operative Housing and Building Associations (NBBL), the Royal Norwegian Society for Rural Development (NRD/ NORCOOP) and a number of European Church organisations. It also receives contributions from local sources.

(HUZA), local authorities and Habitat have supported the Bauleni Urban Self-Help Project whose aim was to improve living conditions in Bauleni through support to self-help activities.

Numerous housing co-operatives are also providing movement-to-movement assistance for the formation of housing co-operatives in Latin America, East and Central Europe and Asia.

* DESWOS, the German Assistance Association for Social Housing, is active in promoting self-help housing co-operatives in East and Central Europe, Latin America and Asia.

* The Cooperative Housing Foundation (CHF) of the United States is also very active in providing assistance to housing co-operatives in Central and Eastern Europe and the Newly Independent States (NIS), Latin America and Asia. The CHF model has integrated basic co-operative principles into a development model that has been singled out by the United Nations Centre for Human Settlement (HABITAT).

In Latin America for example, CHF is spearheading an innovative, hemisphere-wide effort to create regional associations of new associate members of ICA Housing, a sectoral organization of the ICA. Associate members will be recruited from community-based organizations (CBOs), small non-governmental associations (NGOs) and co-operatives which, by virtue of their size, reach or financial situation, do not fit the profile of traditional ICA members. For a modest fee, associate members will be integrated into a global network of co-operative associations. They will access, disseminate and exchange information, lessons learned and best practices. The ICA network will also serve as means of matching international organizations which provide financing and technical assistance with the grassroots organizations in need of such support. As a first step toward this goal, CHF is currently drawing on its extensive relationship with small and medium-sized organizations working in areas as diverse as credit, housing, urban environment and sanitation to conduct a survey of potential ICA Housing associate members. The survey will be key to defining ways in which the ICA Housing may broaden its base and fulfil its mission. By next year, the decentralized ICA regional offices, through collaboration with the ICA Housing, will be able to function as a clearing-house for small co-operatives and associations throughout Latin America. The ICA will also significantly increase its awareness and responsiveness to small communities' issues.

Theme for International Co-operative Day

Co-operative Enterprise: Empowerment for People-centred Sustainable Development

Empowerment for People-centred Sustainable Development has been chosen as the theme for this year's International Day of Co-operatives. The theme was chosen in consultation with the United Nations and with the new ICA President, Mr. Graham Melmoth.

The theme will enable the ICA to give prominence to the new Co-operative Principles while linking to a variety of issues of importance to the United Nations in 1996.

ICA will provide input to the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty 1996, which will focus on the need for people-centred, sustainable development to reduce unemployment and hunger, empower women and provide basic services. The theme will also follow up the major UN conferences — the World Summit for Social Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women, and the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) — all of which call on governments to create partnerships with co-operatives as a means of tackling today's most urgent problems.

The International Day of Co-operatives will be officially celebrated on 6 July 1996, by the United Nations and by co-operatives around the world.

The International Co-operative Alliance is an independent, non-governmental association which unites, represents and serves co-operatives worldwide. The ICA was founded in London in 1895. Its members are national and international co-operative organisations in all sectors of activity including agriculture, banking, energy, industry, insurance, fisheries, housing, tourism and consumer co-operatives. ICA has more than 230 member organisations from over 100 countries, representing more than 760 million individuals worldwide.

In 1946, the ICA was one of the first non-governmental organisations to be accorded United Nations Consultative Status. Today it is one of the sixty-nine organisations holding Category 1 Consultative Status with the UN Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC).

Co-operatives worldwide have been celebrating International Co-operative Day since 1923, when the Day was initiated to strengthen the unity of the Alliance and as a means of publicising the Co-operative Movement worldwide. In 1992, the United Nations General Assembly proclaimed the first Saturday of July 1995 to be United Nations International Day of Co-operatives, marking the centenary of the establishment of the International Co-operative Alliance. In 1994, it invited the international community to observe this Day annually, starting from 1995.

In this way the United Nations intends its own celebrations to support and extend those of the international co-op movement.

ICA Adopts New Logo

The logo which has been used during the ICA Centennial Year will continue to be used by ICA.

The logo, which depicts doves of peace emerging from the rainbow colours, universally recognised as the ICA and Co-operative Colours and adopted by the Executive in 1925, represents the unity of ICA's diverse membership.

As the original design only incorporates six of the seven colours of the rainbow, the acronyms ICA, ACI, MKA, IGB can be added in violet, the seventh colour of the rainbow.

The new logo is more appropriate than the logo used by the organisation for the past eight years because it incorporates the whole spectrum of the rainbow and can be used in all of ICA official languages, indeed in all languages, whereas the former logo could only be used in English and inverted to be used in Spanish and French. The ICA has five official languages: English, French, Spanish, German and Russian, therefore, it was necessary to adopt a logo which could be used in all of these languages.

Strategic Alliances Conference

The promotion of trade, joint ventures and investment between co-operatives was the theme bringing together more than 700 co-operators from mainly Latin America, the Caribbean, Canada and the U.S. for the annual Regional Conference of the Americas on 6-8 December 1995 in Miami, Florida.

In addition to briefing delegates on the current political, economic and social conditions in Latin America, international experts from the public and private sector, academia and the co-operative movement analyzed the potential of co-operatives forming strategic alliances for meeting the challenges of today's global economy.

Sectoral and specialized workshops were also held, giving participants the opportunity to share their experiences in forming partnerships and to discuss possible areas of collaboration. Moreover, co-operative sponsored luncheons, trade stands and an individualized business meetings session set the stage for a conference aimed pragmatically at fostering co-operative business.

The 1996 Regional Conference, whose theme will be "Deglobalization: Global Challenges, Local Responses," is being planned for 20 - 22 November 1996 in San José, Costa Rica. It will be followed by the Second Regional Assembly of the Americas on 23 November.

Co-operatives, A Question of People

On 4-6 June 1996, co-operative experts in Human Resource Development (HRD) will converge on Lima, Peru, for a Continental Forum that will culminate in the final draft of a continental HRD strategy.

Since receiving its mandate to focus on the area of HRD from the 1st Regional Assembly of the Americas in August 1994, the Regional Office of the Americas, in collaboration with regional experts, has been developing a continental strategy for HRD to be included in the Strategic Plan for 1996-2000. The final strategy document will be presented for formal adoption at the 2nd Regional Assembly of the Americas in November 1996.

This preliminary phase of strategic formulation is being sponsored by the Swedish Co-operative Centre (SCC), the Canadian Co-operative Association (CCA), the European-funded PROCOOPCA, and the COOPNET Programme of the International Labour Office (ILO).

The HRD strategy has the following components: the creation of a computerized information network through Internet; support for the formulation and implementation of HRD plans in co-operatives; the exchange and marketing of innovative products for HRD; support for incorporating the gender perspective in co-operatives; and work with co-operative youth.

Regional Gender Campaign

This year's International Women's Day, 8 March 1996, will mark the launching of the regional campaign "Women! How Many Are We, and What Do We Want?" with special ceremonies taking place in Panama, El Salvador and Costa Rica, and national workshops in the Dominican Republic and Guatemala.

This campaign, coordinated by the Regional Office of the Americas' Gender in Co-operatives programme, is aimed at increasing the visibility of women's participation at both the base and sectoral levels of the co-operative movement in the Americas. Moreover, the "How Many Are We, and What Do We Want" campaign initiates a process of reflection on the interests and aspirations of women within the co-operative movement in terms of economics, politics, culture, family and participation.

At the national level, information will be disseminated and statistics will be collected on the level of participation of women in the co-operative movement, and women co-operators will be surveyed in order to develop a national platform representing women's interests.

This process will culminate in the creation and adoption of a Continental Women's Platform at the Continental Women's Forum to be held 18 - 19 November 1996 in San José, Costa Rica, just prior to the Regional Conference and Regional Assembly of the Americas.

Business with the Latin American Co-ops

The Regional Office for the Americas continues its publication of the series "Doing Business with the Co-operatives of Latin America" with new books planned this year for the following countries: Chile, Ecuador, Paraguay, Peru, Honduras, Bolivia, Panama, Puerto Rico and Venezuela.

These books serve as practical guides to doing business with the co-operative sector in Latin America, providing a synthesis of the economic, political and legal situation in each country; a survey of export and investment incentives; an analysis of the co-operative sector by economic activity; and valuable leads on potential business opportunities with specific co-operatives.

Guidebooks are currently available for the following countries: Mexico, Colombia, Costa Rica, Guatemala, El Salvador, Nicaragua, Uruguay, Argentina, and Brazil.

Desjardins Enters the US Capital Markets

The Desjardins caisse populaire movement in Quebec has successfully launched the first "Débenture Desjardins", with a total value of 200 million US dollars. Offered mainly to institutional investors in the United States, the debentures have an interest rate of 7.37 percent and carry no voting rights.

According to Desjardins President, Claude Béland, this new form of capitalisation demonstrates that the co-operative system can successfully enter the large institutional investment market, "while at the same time respecting its mission, values, and distinctive character."

USA

Co-operatives Active in Rural Communities

New co-operatives across the USA are revitalizing rural communities, according to testimony provided November 1 at a USDA hearing by the National Co-operative Business Association (NCBA).

A small USDA programme that funds regional co-operative development centres is showing great results. Over the last 10 years, NCBA has committed itself to the creation and successful operation of centres for rural co-operative development. Today, all across rural America, citizens are using co-operatives to start their own businesses. In the Western part of the US, co-operatives create new jobs processing recycled material into retail products; in the upper Midwest, co-operatives engage in value-added processing of agricultural products that is raising farm income on the commodities they produce; and in the South, community development credit unions are providing loans for small businesses owned by minorities in rural areas.

This economic development activity is conducted on a regional basis through a network of co-operative development centres. The benefit to rural communities is significant because co-operatives aggregate economic power in large enough units to make businesses competitive in a global economy.

Zambia

ZCF Weathers Economic Down-turn

The Zambia Co-operative Federation recorded decreased profits in 1994-95 (K 145 million compared to K 870 million the year previously), but continued its restructuring in order to cope with the effects of the Structural Adjustment Programme. Staff size was reduced from 415 to 282 as part of ZCF's cost-cutting measures. Zambia's GDP declined in real terms in 1994, and its agricultural output fell by 19.8 percent, with the result that both maize and maize meal had to be imported in the first quarter of 1995.
