It was once pointed out by a great classic that the cultural level of a nation can be judged from its attitude toward women. This statement would perhaps deserve to be supplemented in the respect that the cultural level of a society can also be determined on the basis of its attitude toward children and the young generation, since the approach to children has from time immemorial been a criterion of man's moral maturity.

Cooperatives help in crystallising rural economy. The role played by cooperatives in a rural economy cannot be overemphasized. They are a sort of democratic organisations formed with a common brand of interest for mutual benefit without the profit motive behind. As pointed out by the author, cooperatives have made significant contribution towards stimulating the rural economy in various states.

Ivory Coast Cooperatives Score in National Markets.
ILO INFORMATION,
Volume 15, No. 4, October 1979, p. 5.

In 1977-78, village-level cooperative in the Ivory Coast marketed 20 per cent of the national production of Cocoa and coffee and the members received premiums amounting to $3.7 million, part of which will be used for village improvement projects such as housing infirmaries and schools.

Behind this significant achievement of the Ivory Coast Cooperative movement lies a decade of ILO Involvement. In 1969, at the invitation of the government and in collaboration with the UNDP, the ILO helped launch a National Centre for the Promotion of Cooperative Enterprises which was the beginning of the rural cooperatives, known locally as Groupements a vocation cooperative (GVCs).
Today, 10 years later, the scope of ILO assistance has broadened. It now embraces some 2,000 village cooperatives and its in-country team comprises three experts, 10 associate experts and 15.25 bilateral volunteers, but its essential mission has not changed. It is still to train cooperative organisers and administrators, select appropriate cooperative structures for different zones and provide on the spot technical assistance to cooperative leaders and staff.

After independence, the fertiliser industry in India stands as the second largest industrial sector. Internationally, the Indian fertiliser industry occupies fourth place. Cooperatives have predominant place as 60 per cent of the fertiliser sold in our country is by the cooperative system. In IFFCO, cooperatives have now within short span earned for itself the credit for being the largest producer and seller of fertilisers in this country.
The fertiliser needs of Indian agriculture are on increase and forecasts indicate a doubling of fertiliser consumption in next five years. Therefore, we in cooperatives have Cooperatives help in crystallising rural economy. The role played by cooperatives in a rural economy cannot be overemphasized.

They are a sort of democratic organisations formed with a common brand of interest for mutual benefit without the profit motive behind. As pointed out by the author, cooperatives have made significant contribution towards stimulating the rural economy in various States.

pp. 1278-1280.

An analysis carried out by the authors who are associated with the Division of Dairy Economics, Statistics and Management of the National Dairy Research Institute, Karnal, in the economics of a public sector milk processing plant indicates that the unit was making a loss of 33 paise per Kg. of standardised milk produced by it in 1976-77. They suggest that to cut unit cost it was necessary that the plant processed larger quantities of milk procured from nearby areas to minimise transportation charges and utilised its fixed investment more efficiently.

(1) There will be severe shortage of feed and forages in India during the period 1978-79 to 1984-85. The severity of the shortages will increase with the increase in the numbers of cross-bred milch cattle.

(2) The acreage requirements for meeting the feed and fodder deficits are exceedingly large, and will increase at a very high rate.

(3) The feed and fodder scarcity will hit small farmers the hardest. The prospects of benefits to the landless through the operation Flood II Programmes are bleak.

(4) As in the case of HYV field crops, the gains of the cross-breeding programme are likely to be confined to comparatively well irrigated regions.

Variations in co-operative market shares the subject of several explanatory theories.

Structural, financial, legal and managerial factors have been advanced in these explana-continental farmers to engage in cooperative marketing. This paper evaluates these explanations and argues that the greatest stimulus to cooperative market development in Europe has been the existence and nature of second and third tier cooperative Organisations.

Active participation of the National Agricultural Cooperative Marketing Federation of India (NAFED) in marketing and Processing operations have assured producers of a timely remunerative return and easy access to domestic and foreign markets. It has also safeguarded the interests of consumers in the high priced consuming areas by arranging timely movement of stocks from surplus to deficit areas, at the least possible operational cost. Such operations may appear uneconomical for the Federation on purely traders consideration but these have certainly resulted in boosting production and adoption of improved farming practice in the country, not only quantitatively but also qualitatively. At the same time NAFED's operations have been effective enough in disciplining and regulating prices for the benefit of consumer.

The rich, developed nations are affluent societies in which steps are taken to help those who find it hard to manage. People with the lowest incomes, poorest housing, and often broken families. But social measures in themselves are not enough. Not having enough money is only one of the ways the poor suffer, they also get insufficient benefit from the small amount of money they do have, whether they spend it on goods and services, housing, investment, hire purchase, legal assistance, education of health services. The reasons why the poor pay more have been the subject of exhaustive study in the United States, Britain and other places.

The State, private companies and Consumer Organisations protect consumers. It would appear that the French Consumer Movement has come to a temporary standstill. It is, however, in fact consolidating itself. Legislation must be adapted to the interests of the consumers, dishonest sales methods must be pursued and consumers taught the art of selfdefence. In the current economic crisis, these are big demands to make.

ICA's Consumer Committee must co-ordinate views on consumer policy. For nearly 30 years the consumer cooperative movement has often followed in the tracks of others. With its democratic and consequently rather slow-moving-process of decision-making the cooperative movement often found it difficult making its mark on the growth-oriented society of the 1960s. In the decade ahead, with the emphasis shifting from economic growth to such values as longer life for consumer goods, improving the quality of life, etc, the consumer movement has a particular obligation and excellent opportunity to show the way. ICA President Roger Kerinec, head of the French Consumer Cooperative Movement, underlines the extremely important role ICA's consumer committee will play as spokesman for ICA's view on consumer matters.

Kardex Requires Improvements.
IASLIC BULLETIN,
Volume 24, No. 1, March 1979, pp.15-22.

Highlights the good points of Kardex system over the other systems for recording payments of subscriptions, registration of receipt of journals and sending reminders for missing supplies. On the basis of a survey made in the northern region of India, points out the flaws and defects in the existing forms of Top-Cards and Bottom-Cards. Also suggests the modified form of these cards keeping in view the day to day requirements and in order to render effective reference service in the periodicals section without consulting numerous sources. Specimens of Top-Card, Bottom-Card, Reminder-Card and Reminders 's Record Card have also been given, discussing their various columns in details. At the end, general suggestions have been given for effective working of the Kardex system.

Women, Technology and Development Process.
ECONOMIC AND POLITICAL WEEKLY, Volume XIV, No. 36, Sept. 8, 1979,
pp. 1549-1554.

This paper tries to delineate the significant elements of inequalities of access to technical education and technological knowhow between men and women and to stress the need for policy measures to improve the technological level of women for higher productivity in employment without which the development process (no matter how defined) is likely to encounter serious difficulties.

The paper is divided into four sections. The first section puts together available information on the subject, while the second attempts to examine existing inequalities between men and women as regards access to scientific and technological education and training. The third section examines the impact of technological change on productive employment. The final section puts forward some suggestions for taking discussion on women and technology a step further.

Studies of Educated Working Women in India Trends and Issues.
ECONOMIC AND POLITICAL WEEKLY,
Volume XIV, No. 33, August 18, 1979,
pp. 1435-1440.

Studies on Indian Women Generally Assume that better educational and employment opportunities are fundamental to any improvement in the status of women.
There is, however, little objective basis to warrant such an assumption, for one thing, women from economically weaker sections have always laboured hard, and yet their status has always been low.

This paper briefly surveys the dominant trends in the employment of working women in India and argues that what is called for is a new orientation of the research into the question of working women. Since Sex-related attributes are rooted in social structure, the contention of the paper is that studies of women in India have to be more contextual than has been traditionally the case, if they are to be relevant.

In the process of modernisations and technological change in Third World authority and general status due to technological displacement. In this paper the author presents some examples of such technological displacement from the public as well as the domestic sector. Since the role of women in food production is of such vital importance economically as well as for the well-being of the family, the examples centre on technologies related to food. Also discussed in the paper are some of the consequences of this pattern of development along with some strategies for research and action.

The paper analyses the qualitative and quantitative aspects of female work participation in India. It deals with an aggregate analysis of the relationship between female work participation rates and certain demographic and socio-cultural factors, and examines certain qualitative aspects of female work to provide a complete profile of female work participation. The author also develops an econometric model of rural female work participation, and highlights the policy implications of the results of the study.

Social Science Research is a major growth industry in India. Substantial sums of money are allocated to the University Grants Commission and to the Indian Council of Social Science Research to nature social science research in universities and autonomous research institutions. Many Central government ministries and state government departments also make research grants and employ their own social science research staff. This article reviews those aspects of social science research that are intended to be relevant to public policies and programmes. The article is in two parts. Part one, which was published last week,

The effectiveness of foreign aid basically depends upon the domestic policies, says the author. Foreign economic aid contributes to combating inflation in the recipient country. But it can sometimes increase the money in circulation without increasing the availability of goods produced in the country or arranged through imports. The massive institutions or factories set up through foreign assistance are no solace to the ill-fed or ill-clad masses. These may become a source of serious dislocation in the society.

Absolute poverty, he said, was the lot of 40 per cent of the peoples of the developing countries. Following Mr. McNamara's speech in Nairobi there was a marked shift in emphasis in the Bank's approach to development. This series of articles explains how the Bank is meeting the challenge of poverty in its member countries.

Education In Independence Day- 1979
A Survey.

Education holds the key to the development of the human personality in all its aspects. Education, through providing knowledge, builds up and strengthens an individual's self-confidence and ability. It also enables him to acquire skill. In the modern society an individual cannot hope to reach any status in the social structure unless he is educated. Indeed, even the lowest-paid government job is no longer available to an uneducated person in this country.. Whatever way it is viewed, education is a sine qua non for development material, intellectual and spiritual. The unfortunate reality in this country is that the vast majority of the population still remains illiterate. What is even sadder is that the small number that is educated in this country can again be not provided with gainful employment so that their education remains largely unproductive and irrelevant to the society in general.

World in Economic Imbalance.
EASTERN ECONOMIST,

pp. 753-755.

At the root of the current economic decline of the west is the unwillingness of politicians who wield power and the public to make essential adjustments in their way of life or outlook, says the author. The battering from steeply rising inflation, unemployment and trade deficits has brought about a slight change in objectives from the aim of continuous rise to maintaining the standards already achieved. This has become impossible with rising oil prices and the collapse of the monetary system. The author is apprehensive that the decline in the west will seriously hamper the development of the Third World. Only enlightened international action, he says, can avert the grim future that faces the developed as well as the developing worlds.

Past experiences in Indian developmental programmes stand witness to this. The need of the hour is to deviate from such thinking and adopt spatial approach.

An analysis carried out by the authors who are associated with the Division of Dairy Economics, statistics and Management of the National Dairy Research Institute, Karnal, in the economics of a public sector milk processing plant indicates that the unit was making a loss of 33 paise per kg. of standardised milk produced by it in 1976-77. They suggest that to cut unit cost it was necessary that the plant processed larger quantities of milk procured from nearby areas to minimise transportation charges and utilised its fixed investment more efficiently.

Organisational Problems of Small Farmer Development Administration. ECONOMIC AND POLITICAL WEEKLY, Volume XIV, Nos. 51 & 52, December, 22-29, 1979, pp. A-161-A-164.

Much of the benefits intended for small farmers has not reached them and programmes to aid them have been appropriated by the affluent sections of the peasantry. One of the causes for such a state of affairs might be that the existing administrative organisation is not structured to cater to the specific needs of small farmers and guard against manipulation by the rural rich.

This article seeks to analyse, from an administrative perspective, the special difficulties of the small farmers and identify some significant weaknesses in the prevalent administrative organisation for small farmer development at the grass-roots level.
