DINESH, C:
 Agricultural Finance by A Commercial Bank. Vaikunth Mehta National Institute of Cooperative Management. Reserve Bank of India Building, Ganesh Khind Road, Poona 16, 1970, pp 113, price Rs.4 (mimeo)

The most important development in the field of agricultural credit in recent years is the entry of commercial banks in the field of credit which has raised certain issues. The main issues are: the impact of commercial banks on cooperative credit structure, the procedures of financing by commercial banks, the possibilities of collaboration between commercial banks and cooperative credit etc. The study indicates certain trends which deserve attention, such as affluent farmers are taking benefits of the loans granted by commercial banks. These farmers also keep their deposits with the commercial banks. Members are not very much particular about their loyalty towards their credit societies. They are more interested in getting quick loans from whatever source it may be. Keeping in view the above facts cooperative banking institutions will have to consider radical changes in their past practices. Managers have to be given more freedom in granting loans. And also other loaning procedures have to undergo drastic changes otherwise cooperative credit may face stagnation.

INDIA (RESERVE BANK OF):

Guidelines to Commercial Banks for Financing of Primary Agricultural Credit Societies. Agricultural Credit Department, Reserve Bank of India, Central Office, Bombay, 1970, pp 60, price not mentioned.

As the title of book suggests there is a need for commercial banks to enter the area of agricultural finance. After the nationalisation of fourteen Indian banks, it was felt that these banks should start extending loans to agricultural sector. The problem was, how they should finance, directly or through cooperative credit. For financing through cooperatives credit a procedure was required. The present publication is the outcome of that need. The procedure will be first tried on a pilot project basis in five States of India, Haryana, Andhra Pradesh, Madhya Pradesh, Mysore, Uttar Pradesh, where central cooperative banks are administratively and financially weak units and hence incapable of meeting fully the credit requirements of agriculturists. The book has been divided into three parts, I-Introduction, II - Guidelines III - Appendices. Under guidelines the following parts are elaborated: Constitution and manner of functioning of a primary agricultural credit society, procedure for taking over the existing liabilities of societies by a commercial bank, loaning procedure for short-term agricultural purposes, scales of finance, preparation of the credit limit statement, security, rate of interest, time schedule, delegation of powers for sanctioning of loans, disbursement procedure, preparation of withdrawal application, disbursement of the "kind" portion of the limit, seasonality in disbursement and recovery operations, execution of documents, medium-term credit, direct lending, long-term credit, recovery operations, action against defaulters, settlement of disputes, supervision and coordination. Under appendices I to VIII proforma application forms and other suggested legal documents are enclosed. Under appendix IX policy matters on rationalisation of medium-term loan policy are explained for the benefit of banks and agricultural cooperative credit societies.

The first edition of the Cooperative Trade Directory was brought out in 1964, and subsequently two more revised editions of the Directory were published in 1966 and 1967. The Third revised printed edition of the Directory "was an expanded and improved version of the earlier two in the following respects: First of all, information from some more countries which were not covered in earlier editions has been added. Secondly the entries appearing in the second edition of the Directory were revised after the information has been checked with the appropriate organisations. Thirdly, additional information collected by our Commercial Specialist, who recently completed a survey of cooperative trade in South-East Asia, has been added. A commodity index and also two appendices, containing a list of member-organisations of Cooperative Wholesale Committee for the Alliance and another one giving information on branches and depots opened by cooperative wholesales in other parts of the world, have also been added. Finally, the column appearing in the earlier directories giving the quantities has been deleted due largely to the fact that exact information concerning the quantities was not forthcoming". The present publication is the second supplement to the third edition. It provides that additional information which did not appear in third edition of if there were any changes, alteration viz. changes of addresses and changes of commodities etc. are incorporated in the 2nd supplement.

The Indian Rural Problems.
Indian Society of Agricultural Economics, Bombay, 1970, (Seventh Revised Edition), pp 622, Price Rs.20.00

It is the seventh edition of a very popular book on Indian Economics with special reference to India's rural problems, as its title suggests. The first edition of the book was brought out in 1944. Since then India has undergone several socio-economic reforms and developments. With its subsequent revised editions, the book has analysed and observed the changes. The cooperative movement is also a part of the Indian economy. The cooperatives have played a very significant role in rural and agricultural upliftment. A publication on Indian economics or rural problems without a thorough description of cooperative movement shall be treated as an incomplete publication. This book in its chapter Nos. XIII and XIV, (pages 362 and 421) thoroughly deals with cooperatives which have helped the upliftment of India's rural and agricultural economy.

Cooperation has admittedly been accorded a position of fundamental importance in the rural economy of India. The cooperative method has been accepted as indispensable instrument of democratic planning and as an important medium for regeneration of the country's socio-economic life. This role has been thoroughly dealt with and accepted by the various Committees on Cooperation appointed by the Central and State Governments of India.

Very naturally, the national government paid considerable attention towards the development of cooperative movement after independence. The following are the few highlights of the laudable achievement of cooperatives in India :

"Cooperatives are playing an increasingly important role in credit and input provision, processing and marketing. The amount of cooperative credit rose from Rs.229 million in 1950-51 to Rs. 4,046 million in 1967-68. The value of agricultural inputs distributed by cooperatives rose from

COOPERATION GENERAL (contd)I N D I ALanguage : English

"Rs. 360 million in 1960-61 to Rs.2,300 million in 1967-68, the largest item was chemical fertilizer which shot up from Rs. 280 million to Rs.1,830 million."

In 1968, the General Assembly of the United Nations passed a resolution recognising the important role of the Cooperative Movement in the development of various fields of production and distribution, including animal husbandry, fisheries, manufacturing, housing, credit institution, education and health services. It has also recognised that the promotion of the Cooperative Movement will contribute to the implementation of the United Nations Second Development Decade. The United Nations has requested the International Cooperative Alliance to collaborate in this matter. In response to this request, the ICA has declared the Seventies as Cooperative Development Decade. The importance of study of a subject of such a magnitude could hardly be under-rated today.

The book is an attempt to evaluate the development of the cooperative movement in India during the planning era. It is largely meant to be a textbook for post-graduate students and others who want to study the movement seriously.

The publication has been divided in twenty-seven chapters with an appendix. The following are the main chapters of the book : (1) Introductory : Genesis of the Cooperative Movement, (2) Cooperative Principles: Analysis and Explanation, (3) Cooperation and other forms of Enterprises, (4) Rural Credit and Cooperation, (5) History and Growth of Cooperative Movement in India, (6) Cooperation during the Planning Era, (7) Cooperative Banking Structure, (8) Reorganisation of Agricultural Credit Societies, (9) Central Cooperative Banks, (10) Apex Cooperative Banks, (11) Non-Agricultural Credit Movement, (12) Land Development Banks, (13) Agricultural Refinance Corporation, (14) Cooperative Marketing, (15) Cooperative Processing, (16) Consumers' Cooperation, (17) Cooperative farming, (18) Housing Cooperatives, (19) Industrial Cooperatives, (20) Other forms of Cooperation,

"The International Cooperative Alliance was very fortunate in having the benefit of Professor D.G. Karve's advice and guidance in regard to its Regional Office & Education Centre for South-East Asia. Karve was the Chairman of the Advisory Council of this office from its inception in 1960 to the time of his demise in 1967 with a short break in 1962-63 when he was Deputy Governor of the Reserve Bank of India. Prof. Karve's guidance and inspiration contributed in large measure to the proper development of the ICA's activities in the South-East Asian Region".

"This Commemoration Volume containing most of the important writings of Prof. Karve, and the unveiling of his portrait in the Regional Office in February 1971 marked the Tenth Anniversary of the founding of the ICA Regional Office & Education Centre for South-East Asia in New Delhi. The cost of this portrait, significantly, has been met by the national cooperative movements of the Region."

The book has been divided in four parts:

At the present juncture of cooperative development in the developing countries of the Region served by the International Cooperative Alliance Regional Office & Education Centre for South-East Asia, the role of the governments of these countries vis-a-vis the Cooperative Movement is by far the most crucial matter affecting the movement.

In the newly-liberated countries in this Region, such as India, Ceylon and Malaysia, the Cooperative Movement was introduced in the early years of this century by the British who then held sway over these countries. They enacted cooperative laws, to provide the necessary legal sanctions and safeguards, and set up departments of government for the promotion of the movement. The British were naturally aware of the potential of the Cooperative Movement. They had seen it nearer home. The Cooperative Movement of Denmark had played an important part in setting up a constitutional monarchy in that country, the British

COOPERATION GENERAL (contd)Language : English

Movement was itself a force to reckon with and the International Cooperative Alliance had been formed (in 1895).

When the cooperatives join hands with the State as independent and willing partners in the great task of national development, economic democracy would be buttressing political democracy. As stated by the 1969 ICA Congress Resolution on Contemporary Cooperative Democracy, "political democracy is indispensable to the development of cooperation and reciprocally the free development of cooperative ideas and activities is indispensable to economic democracy without which political democracy remains incomplete".

The present publication, which includes papers submitted by the participants attending the Experts Conference on the subject, gives in a nutshell an idea to what extent the government can contribute to the development of the Cooperative Movement and how far cooperative movements can contribute to the national development. It is hoped that the views expressed in the papers and the Conference Report, presented in this book, will be useful to all concerned in the shaping of government policy in regard to cooperative development in the developing countries.

The publication has been divided in three sections. Section One deals on the State and Cooperative Development : An Overview, under this heading paper by P.R. Dubhashi, appeared with same title as of the heading of Section One. Section Two, has two sub-sections, they are as follows :

Rural Development in Action : The Comprehensive Experiment at Comilla, East Pakistan.

Cornell University Press, Ithaca, 1970, pages 351, price Rs. 93.75.

It is the story of the first ten years of a successful rural development programme, a programme that has initiated gradual improvement and which has broken a vicious cycle of debt and fatalism. It tells of the activities of the East Pakistan Academy for Rural Development, an agency established in 1959 to train public officials and to find indigenous answers to rural problems.

The story is set in Comilla thana, a country-sized rural area 80 miles north of the Bay of Bengal and the home of a quarter-million people. Here food was in short supply, sickness was common, and life was a struggle for existence. Here the average farmer owned or leased about 1.7 acres of land. If he was a landowner, 40 per cent of his crop went to the moneylender. If he was tenant, half went to a landlord.

The major achievement of the Comilla Academy is that, while benefiting the people of Comilla Thana, it has afforded a workable prototype for the rest of East Pakistan, and perhaps for other parts of the world. The Academy was conceived as a laboratory for social and economic research that would enlist the villagers, the staff, and the officers of the government in a programme of research and experimentation. In its ten-year history, the Academy has succeeded in providing viable voluntary cooperative units at the village level, a strong administration that emphasizes development activities, continuing education for villagers and officials, and a formula for the expansion of proven programmes to other parts of the province.

COOPERATION GENERAL (contd)

Much, of course, remains to be done before there can be widespread improvement in the living conditions of rural people in East Pakistan, but progress is being made. This book is an account of the early struggles, the failures and the successes.

The main contents discussed in detail are the following :

1. The Setting, and Operating Assumptions,
2. Origins and Institutional Development,
3. A New Village-based Cooperative System,
4. Changing Concepts of Local Government,
5. Irrigation and Rural Electrification,

Praeger Publishers, 111-Fourth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10003, USA, 1970, pages 489, price US$20.00 or Indian Rs.153.00

This is perhaps the first publication which has systematically and comprehensively dealt on the cooperative movement of Asia.

This study seeks to examine the status and problems of cooperatives in Asia. In view of the broad nature of the subject matter and the large number of countries to be covered, a selective approach has had to be adopted. Thus, the author has limited the study to cooperatives covering fields of activity that generally account for relatively large membership. Invariably, these are also the relatively more important fields of activity in the socio-economic context. In one or two instances, however, the latter consideration has been decisive. First is the existence of cooperatives of the selected type, and second, the availability of the required information. Fortunately, only a few countries have had to be excluded or partially covered probably for lack of adequate information.

The book has been divided into three parts. Part I gives an overall view of the status and problems of cooperatives in the field of agricultural credit, marketing and supplies. Part II discusses the status and problems of consumers cooperation, urban credit cooperatives, industrial cooperatives and cooperative housing. Part III covers ten selected country studies of agricultural cooperative credit, marketing and supplies. The countries covered are Ceylon, India, Iran, Japan, West Malaysia, Pakistan, The Philippines, South Korea, Taiwan and Thailand.

Rural Credit in Western India 1875-1930 : Rural Credit and the Cooperative Movement in the Bombay Presidency.

University of California Press, Berkeley, 1970, pages 269, price Rs. 65.69

India was the first non-western country to experiment with rural cooperatives. Many of the approaches to cooperation that are now taken for granted in developing countries were painfully worked out in India. The present work is a documented study of efforts to institute a "development programme" in one part of India before such attempts became fashionable.

Although the author's emphasis is primarily historical, he draws on an extensive range of economic and anthropological materials. He is naturally concerned with the evolution of administrative policy and with the personal quirks of officials, but he frequently reaches down to the grass-roots as well. He makes a special study of non-official cooperative leadership in western India at a time when that leadership was increasingly affected by nationalist politics and the politics of cast rivalry. He compares development in three distinct linguistic and cultural areas - Gujarat, Maharashtra, and the Karnatak - which were united only to some extent in looking towards the growing commercial and industrial metropolis of Bombay.

In earlier years, scholar-administrators wrote widely about the rural areas of the Punjab and the cooperatives there. The importance of this book lies in the fact that, within a broad context of social, economic and administrative history, it is a pioneering study of cooperative success and failures in a less frequently examined part of India. It should be of interest to many persons who are grappling with the practical problems of the under-developed world today. The main contents discussed in detail are as follows :

" (i) The Deccan Riots and Deccan Indebtedness, 1875-1904, (ii) Some False Starts, 1904-1911, (iii) The Registrar and the Societies, 1911-1919, (iv) "The Peak"? 1920-1923, (v) Reality, 1923-1930, and (vi) Past and Present.

Crop Loan System : A Study in Andhra Pradesh and Punjab.

National Institute of Community Development,
Rajendranagar, Hyderabad, 1970, pages 101, price
Indian Rs. 12.00

The Study of the problem of financing agriculturists in developing countries like India is important for more than one reason. In order to produce more, farmers have to spend more on improved inputs which must be financed either out of savings of or borrowings by the farmer, to take him out of the vicious circle of subsistence economy. The role of short-term credit as a strategic input can be quite significant provided it is wisely used for productive purposes.

It also deals with the role played by cooperative credit societies in supplying short-term credit in IADP (Intensive Agriculture District Programme) area to the agriculturists.

The Study reported in this publication analyses the nature and working of the crop loan system in selected areas in Andhra Pradesh and Punjab which are major food crop growing areas in India.

The socio-economic consequences of some of the trends noticed in this Study should be of some value to the policy-makers and the field workers.

The main contents of the publication are as follows :

Its efforts to mobilize thrift among the railwaymen and make it available to them in times of need have been continuous, substantial and laudable.

An attempt has been made to study the performance of S.E. Railway Employees Cooperative Urban Bank Limited, Calcutta, with particular reference to its productivity and profitability over a period of years from 1956 to 1969.

The purpose of this report is to place a few of the important facts on the surface to stimulate the committee of management to arrive at certain tentative decisions and set their aims for the next 5, 10, 15 or 20 years to come. Being a large society with a good record of service, it has the potentiality to lead others in the field by setting an example worth emulations.

Reserve Bank of India, Central Office, Bombay, 1970, pages xxiv + 878, price Indian Rs. 50.00 or US$ 10.00 for foreign.

The Reserve Bank of India has recently published its history covering the first 16 years of the Bank. It was prepared by Mr. S.L.N. Sinha, under the guidance of an Editorial Committee headed by Dr. C.D. Deshmukh, (Chairman), J.J. Anjaria, R.G. Saraiya, and Dr. Bhabatosh Datta.

The volume falls into four broad sections : the Preparatory Years, that is pre-1935 developments, the Formative Years 1935-39, the War Years 1939-45 and the Post-war years 1945-51. Since its inception, unlike other central banks, the Reserve Bank of India has been an initiator for proper channelization of agricultural credit through cooperative banks down to primary cooperative credit societies then to agriculturists.

The Reserve Bank has a special department on Agricultural Credit, which provides credit guidance and supervision to the cooperative credit societies. In a way, Reserve Bank is a true friend, philosopher, and guide to the Cooperative Movement, specially agricultural credit in India.

In this publication, three chapters are devoted on the agricultural cooperative credit activities of the Bank, namely "First Steps in Agricultural Finance, on page 199, Policies in the Sphere of Agricultural Credit, from page 467, and, Progress in the Sphere of Agricultural Credit, from page 759.

Seminar of the Chief Executive Officers of Central Land Development Banks at Madras.

Agricultural Credit Department, Reserve Bank of India, Central Office, Garment House, Post Box 1037, Bombay-18, 1970, pages 252.

A Seminar for the Chief Executive Officers of Central Land Development Banks was organised by the Reserve Bank of India in Madras from 24 to 28 February 1969. The main aim of the Seminar was to give an opportunity to the chief executive officers of the various central land development banks to discuss their mutual problems and also to exchange views in order to bring about a larger measure of understanding of the practical difficulties involved in the execution of policies and the manner in which improvements at the operational level could be brought out. The Seminar was held at the Reserve Bank's Staff Training College in Madras. The programme of the Seminar and the list of participants are given at Appendix-I and II. The topics discussed are the progress in the implementation of various schemes of the Agricultural Refinance Corporation and the need for central land development banks to pay greater attention to these schemes. The agenda notes, prepared in the Agricultural Credit Department of the Reserve Bank, relating to loan procedure, management of funds and other allied topics. The main topics discussed are the following:- "(i) Lift Irrigation Schemes, (ii) Tractor Scheme, (iii) Utilisation Studies, (iv) Formulation of Schemes for Development of Plantation and Horticulture, (v) Steps necessary for strengthening the short-term credit structure, (vi) Difficulties in the implementation of sanctioned schemes, (vii) Loan Policies and Procedures, (viii) Management of Funds, (ix) Management and Administration, (x) Inter-institutional Relationship, (xi) Regional Imbalances in the Development of the Long-term Cooperative Credit Structure, (xii) Fourth Five Year Plan : Some Aspects of the Problem of Long-term Cooperative Agriculture Credit". Two other papers are also included in this book, namely, "How to assess the repayment capacity of cultivators and Inter-institutional relationship".

The Cooperative - An Agency for Rural Development : The Kaira District Cooperative Milk Producers' Union Limited, Anand, Gujarat State (India), (Agricultural Economics Report No. 42).

Department of Agricultural Economics, Michigan State University, East Lansing, 1966 (Reprinted in February 1970, by the Kaira District Cooperative Milk Producers' Union Limited, Anand, with the kind permission of the author), pages 49.

The author has quoted a few excellent remarks on the wonderful success achieved by the Kaira District Cooperative Milk Producers' Union Limited, Anand, Gujarat State (India).

"A reporter for the Eastern Economist, after visiting the Cooperative Union concluded in an article on June 19, 1953 that the programme "is a piece of village uplift - is successful - can be copied in any part of India - is one of the most interesting, important and inspiring enterprises ever launched in India - the villagers are being taught democracy by living it".

Almost eleven years later, another reporter wrote in the Times of India, of February 17, 1964 "People frustrated and despondent - have only to go to Anand to have their hopes revived. It is a revolution in the rural economy. There is a different atmosphere in the area covered. The breed of buffalo has been improved, farmers and families are more sturdy, self-reliant and prosperous, milk and milk products are beginning to find their true place in the human diet, the genuine cooperative has proven its worth and has come to stay. The village cooperatives have become the focus and initiator of various schemes of modernisation and improvement".

DAIRY COOPERATIVES (contd)I N D I ALanguage : English

Key persons responsible for the organisation, development and services of the cooperative union have been honoured by their central and state governments and also by foreign agencies. An increasing number, concerned with rural development are recognising the significance of the cooperative scheme and demonstration around Anand.

The writer has been interested in this dairy developing, processing and marketing cooperative for several reasons. It has been very successful in a developing economy where the big proportion of the cooperatives have had difficulty or achieved, but limited success to date. The expansion of the Cooperative Union and its affiliated locals has resulted in more and more villagers obtaining both a regular and an increasing income which has been used to improve their family living and to assist a variety of needed social services. The Cooperative Union has played a significant role in developing a traditional society towards modern goals.

An analysis of the development of the milk industry in Gujarat State and the contributions of the Kaira District Cooperative Milk Producers' Union should be of value for other developing areas, especially those with large urban markets and a high dairy potential, and also for foreign agencies which are assisting in rural development. The Cooperative Union has been a successful business, an agency to develop the dairy industry, and an institution for general rural development.

This paper attempts to describe and analyse the functions of the Cooperative Union and the pattern of rural development evolved in the Kaira District.

Rural Development Administration in India.

Popular Prakashan, 35-C, Tardeo Road, Bombay-34, 1970, pages 343, price Rs.35.00

In recent years development administration has come to be recognised as a distinct branch of Public Administration. It has a particular significance in relation to the development of under-developed countries. Together with "Economics of Growth" and "Politics of Modernity", development administration has assumed a central place in the discussion of the process of change that is unfolding itself in the developing world of today. The selected essays by the author included in this publication significantly contribute to the understanding of development administration. Apart from being of interest in the context of the Indian situation, they are relevant to a comparative study of the patterns of administration in the developing countries. They cover a wide spectrum of development administration including administrative evolution, community development, cooperation and rural local self-government, coordination in development administration, training of personnel in development administration, areas and functions of development administration and local planning and decentralization. The special merit of the approach of this book lies in interpenetration of administration principles and practical experience, description and analysis, general policies and their varying implementation. The students of Development Administration and indeed everybody interested in understanding the process of development in under-developed countries will find this book both useful and interesting.

While we say or write something on rural economics or rural development in India, the cooperative sector which plays a very significant role in rural upliftment is obviously covered. This publication has taken care fully about the intermingled aspects of the rural economy of India. Therefore, it will be a very useful document for cooperators to understand the complicated and inter-linked administrative problems of villages, where several governmental agencies are working with a similar objectives that is the socio-economic development of villages in which cooperative agencies are also a participants.

Rural Reconstruction in India and China (A Comparative Study).

Sterling Publishers (P) Limited, AB/9, Safdarjung Enclave, New Delhi, 1970, pages 370, price Rs. 30.00

A comparative study of rural reconstruction in India and China is useful from the point of view of locating areas of strength and weaknesses in order to further improve the functioning and performance of the established democratic system in India. Moreover, the evolution of the process of rural reconstruction in India and China differing as they do, in social and political set-up, should certainly go a long way in guiding and influencing the efforts of the developing countries in expediting the process of socio-economic development.

The dissertation provides data for creating a basis of healthy competition as also locating situations from which India and China can learn from each other's experience.

Following chapters have been devoted on Cooperation in the book: "(i) Cooperativisation of Rural Economy in India and China, and, (ii) Community Development in Indian and Rural Communes in China".

The present work is an outcome of his studies in Japan. Part One of this report is devoted exclusively to a description of the agricultural cooperative system in Japan and was submitted to the IDACA at the conclusion of his training. Part Two contains a set of recommendations wherein he has examined in detail the applicability of some of the features of the agricultural cooperatives in Japan in Indian conditions.

The Agricultural Cooperative Movement in Japan is almost of the same age as the Indian Cooperative Movement. During the past more than six decades of its working, it has played an historical role in modernising the art and technique of agriculture, in promoting specialised and diversified farming and in adding to the economic prosperity of the farm population of Japan in many diverse ways. An almost incredible degree of identification of interests of agriculture cooperatives and that of agriculture achieved by the Japanese Agricultural Cooperative Movement is one of the most remarkable feats accomplished by Japan's agricultural cooperatives. Traditions have not been allowed to become taboos and the freshness in approach and execution of various policies and programmes pertaining to agriculture is one of the most valuable assets of the agricultural cooperatives in Japan.

The following are main topics discussed in the book:

(i) Growth of Japanese Agriculture and its Present Characteristics, (ii) The Structure of the Agricultural Cooperative Movement, (iii) The Multipurpose Agricultural Cooperative Societies, (iv) Single-purpose Cooperative Societies, (v) Cooperative Marketing, (vi) Mutual Insurance Business, (vii) Welfare Activities of the Agricultural Cooperatives, (viii) Cooperative Education, (ix) Important National Level Institutions (a) The National Purchasing Federation (Zenkoren), (b) The Central Union of Agricultural Cooperatives, (c) The Central Cooperative Bank for Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry, (d) The Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries Finance Corporation, (e) UNICOOPJAPAN, (f) The National Marketing Federation, and, (g) Research and Agricultural Extension Service in Japan).

It is a report of the Experts' Conference on the "Role of Cooperatives in Agricultural Development" which was held jointly by the ICA Regional Office & Education Centre and the Afro-Asian Rural Reconstruction Organisation, New Delhi, in collaboration with the Government of His Majesty the King of Nepal at Kathmandu, from 16th to 21st November, 1969. Participants from Ceylon, India, Japan, Kenya, Republic of Korea, Malaysia, Nepal, Tanzania, Thailand and the ILO attended the Conference.

The methodology followed was that each of the experts introduced his respective paper and gave such clarifications and additional information as were required by the participants. The issues arising from the papers were next framed and discussed exhaustively by the participants with a view to drawing specific conclusions. The conclusions on all the topics were then considered and adopted by the Conference in its final session. The discussions and conclusions are given in Part II of this report. Background information on the countries of the participants, except Kenya, is given in Part III. A summary of the conclusions is given in Part IV.

The participants also had the opportunity of visiting a panchayat, a primary multipurpose cooperative society and a district cooperative union and were thus enabled, personally, to form an idea of cooperative activities in Nepal in the field of agriculture.

Subjects discussed at the Conference were: (i) Obstacles to Agricultural Development and Factors Contributing to Modernising Agriculture, (ii) Land Reform as a Basis for Agricultural Development and the Role of Cooperatives

Cooperative Oilseeds Processing Project - India.
(Appendix to June 1969 end of tour report) by Harold
D. Rissler, Jr.

United States Agency for International Development, New Delhi, 1970, pages 15, Free.

This report is considered to be an appendix to the Oilseeds Processing Project - India, end of tour report of June 1969, and covers the period from September 1969, to June 30, 1970. This tour is covered by Task Order No. 30 between the Cooperative League of the U.S.A. (CLUSA) and the Government of the United States of America. The prior tour (November 1966 - June 30, 1969) was covered by Task Order No. 16. In Task Order No. 30, the objectives and emphasis varied slightly from the previous one. The major objective continued to be that of assisting the cooperatives in developing the oilseeds processing industry so that they can be a factor in improving the economy of the Indian cultivators.

The primary objective of this tour was to provide assistance to the cooperative programme in training of the national cooperative leadership and management personnel. Another objective was to continue to conduct studies to determine the capability of existing organisations and the need for new ones to undertake marketing support for the movement.

The Advisor's scope of work included: (1) Assisting counterparts at the national level to upgrade competency in feasibility studies so that these individuals can assist at the various levels in improved planning, (2) Continuing to assist processing units in operation and under construction as requested by them, (3) Planning and assisting in organising a management workshop for concerned

Super Market on Cooperative Lines in Malaysia - A Feasibility Study, by Ragnar Arvidsson. (For private circulation only).

ICA Regional Office & Education Centre for South-East Asia, New Delhi, 1970.

The 32nd All Malaysian Cooperative Congress held in April 1970 resolved that possibilities should be explored to establish consumers cooperative super markets in the country. After giving further consideration to this resolution of the national congress, the Cooperative Union of Malaysia approached the Regional Office & Education Centre for South-East Asia of the ICA for making available its experts to undertake necessary preliminary surveys and studies. The ICA, keeping in view the need and nature of the project in Malaysia, made author's services available to the Union to undertake a feasibility study.

The report is the outcome of his study. The report contains his findings and recommendations which the Cooperative Movement of Malaysia and its leaders could consider while taking a final decision on the establishment of cooperative super markets in the country.

The author stressed that before taking a final decision with regard to the location and size of the super markets, more detailed feasibility studies will have to be undertaken for each project.

CONSUMERS COOPERATION (contd)INTERNATIONAL COOPERATIVE ALLIANCELanguage : English

The report is expected to serve as a guide to the national cooperative movement and its leaders in arriving at a conclusion whether to have cooperative super markets or not.

Following are the contents of the report :

- (1) Conclusion, (2) General information, (3) Population, (4) Consumption, (5) Traffic and Transport, (6) Competition, and (7) Consumer Cooperative Stores.

The following are the Annexures to the report :

- (a) Programme for a large super market to be located between Kuala Lumpur and Petaling Jaya,
- (b) Programme for a large super market (slightly bigger than Weld's),
- (c) Programme for a medium size super market (slightly smaller than Weld's),
- (d) Programme for a small super market, and
- (e) Some organisational and operational aspects of cooperative super markets.

Distribution of Consumer Goods Through Cooperatives in Japan, by Ragnar Arvidsson & Shiro Futagami.

ICA Regional Office & Education Centre for South-East Asia, New Delhi, 1971, pages 235 (mimeo).

In the South-East Asian Region, Japan has made considerable progress in recent years in all fields of activities. As a result of optimum industrial productivity, Japan has achieved an economic prosperity of a high order.

Efforts made by Japan to develop the consumer movement are unique and praiseworthy. They have broken the traditional barriers and applied innovators which stand as pointers not only to other developing countries in the Region but also to Western countries that have a long experience in the field of distribution of consumer goods through cooperatives.

The attempt here is to catalogue briefly a few of the achievements and the steps taken to obtain such spectacular results through cooperatives in Japan in recent past with a view to placing before the Asian countries the potentialities for economic growth and social development.

The publication has been divided into the following four parts :

Part I : Japan and its environs.

Part II : It has four headings:

- 1) Introduction to the Consumer Cooperative Movement in Japan.
- 2) Some statistics
- 3) NIKKYOREN - The Central Organisation, and
- 4) Evolutionary history of NADA-KOBE Consumer Cooperative Society.

Part III: It has four headings:

- 1) Introduction to Agricultural Cooperative Movement in Japan.
- 2) Distribution of consumer goods through agricultural cooperatives.
- 3) Mikkabi Agricultural Cooperative Society in Japan - Its Super Market Operation, and
- 4) Super Market operation by Fishery Cooperatives in Japan.

Cooperative Education - Progress or Perish, by P.E. Weeraman : Cooperative Series 5 : International Cooperative Alliance Regional Office & Education Centre for South-East Asia, New Delhi, 1971, pages 20, price Indian Rs. 3.00 or US Cents 40.

The booklet deals with the importance of education for the success of Cooperation. The central idea of Cooperation is to protect themselves from the economic exploitation of middlemen, through self-help and mutual help. To turn this idea into a reality, various types of cooperative societies were organised in several parts of world, viz. cooperative credit, consumer cooperative, cooperative farming and agricultural cooperatives, cooperative marketing and industrial cooperative etc. For the uninterrupted and healthy growth of the cooperative societies, a sound system of member education is the need of the Cooperative Movement. The author emphasises his views in the following words :

"The discipline required of the members of a cooperative society is one that has to be accepted voluntarily. The member has to be convinced that it is in the interests of himself and of his fellow members and this discipline has to be consolidated and developed if it is to bear full fruit. For both the original conviction of the necessity to freely accept a discipline as well as the subsequent

"consolidation and development of that discipline, education is absolutely necessary. Progress, therefore, depends upon this education and without education cooperation will be deviated into other forms and so perish".

Further the author explains the impact of cooperation in socio-economic development. The impact can be felt only when the societies are working on sound economic footing, which is possible only through enlightened members. The author cites the emphasis which has been given by Cooperative Principles Commission on the importance of the cooperative education. The booklet concludes : "Thus the Cooperative Movement will progress only if cooperators give due attention to cooperative education. If there be no cooperative education, before long the Cooperative Movement will lose its distinctive character and force, and with its disappearance from the world, the only hope of establishing economic democracy will have been lost without which political democracy will be of no avail. Thus we may conclude that cooperative education is the sine-qua-non of progress and that without cooperative education the Movement as well as democracy must perish".

The above ideas have been dealt with in the following three parts :

- Part I : deals with these main aspects : "Education - A Cooperative Principle, Cooperation - Its meaning, Basic results of Cooperation, Conviction - A primary need, Education - Vital, Cooperative education is continuous, Three groups to be educated, Responsibility of cooperative institutions, Need for strengthening Unions, U.N. Resolution, State and cooperative development, Cooperation - Revolution without "R", Why Cooperative Education?, and The tasks of cooperative educators.
- Part II : deals with the Role of the Cooperative Movement in Economic and Social Development, and
- Part III : deals with the Cooperative Development Decade.

ICA Regional Office & Education Centre for South-East Asia, New Delhi, 1971, pages 20, price Indian Rs. 3.00 or US Cents 40.

The booklet is a reproduction of the paper which was circulated as part of background documentation prepared by the International Cooperative Alliance at the FAO/UNESCO/ILO World Conference on Agricultural Education and Training held in Copenhagen, Denmark, from 18th July to 8th August 1970.

It discusses cooperative education in relation to agricultural cooperatives. Firstly as background information, the nature of the Cooperative Movement and its contribution to agricultural development has been briefly outlined. Secondly, Cooperative Education activities carried out by the Cooperative Movements are described. These activities may be broadly categorised in two parts : (a) Member education programmes including vocational training of farmers, and, (b) Training of personnel employed by the Cooperative Movements. This discussion is carried out with reference to the Cooperative Movements in South and East Asia with which the ICA Regional Office & Education Centre is primarily concerned, namely, Australia, Ceylon, India, Indonesia, Iran, Japan, Republic of Korea, Malaysia, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand. Thirdly, the activities of the international cooperative training centres including those of the ICA RO & EC are mentioned. Finally, an attempt has been made to indicate the needs of the developing movements in the field of cooperative education to which the advanced cooperative movements can make contribution.

The booklet has been spread out in the following contents: Introduction, Nature of the Cooperative Movement, Importance of Cooperative Education, Cooperative Member Education in South-East Asia, Farm Guidance Activities, Training of Employees, International Cooperative Training Centre, ICA Education Centre for South-East Asia, Educational needs of the Movements in the Region, and, Conclusion.

A concerted effort has been made to develop Consumer Cooperative Movement in India from 1962 onwards. The Government of India formulated in 1962 a Centrally Sponsored Scheme (CSS) to organise a network of consumer cooperative societies in all important cities having a population of 50,000 or more. Under another scheme, it was decided to organise Department Stores called "Cooperative Super Bazars" in cities having a population of 200,000 or more and, later on in other cities on a selective basis.

Several factors contribute to the success of any business enterprise, including a cooperative enterprise. Personnel is one of the key factors in this regard. In view of the setting up of large-sized Cooperative Super Bazars in India, it was felt that a study of Personnel Management in selected Cooperative Super Bazars in the country would be useful in finding out problems in personnel management and suggesting guidelines for improvement. Such a study was also needed for our educational programmes in this field. The Advisory Council for the ICA RO & EC approved of our undertaking this study during the year 1969.

The present report is an outcome of the study of eight Cooperative Super Bazars in India. The study was carried out in close collaboration with the National Cooperative Consumers Federation of India, New Delhi, and the Vaikunth Mehta National Institute of Cooperative Management, Poona.

The following Consumer Stores have been studied in this book: (1) Apka Bazar, Meerut, (2) Cooperative Super Market, Ludhiana, (3) Super Bazar, Baroda, (4) Sahakari Bhandar, Bombay, (5) Chintamani, Coimbatore, (6) Cooperative Departmental Store, Ernakulam, (7) Jantha Bazar, Bangalore, and (8) Kalpalatha, Hyderabad, and their local branches.

COOPERATIVE MANAGEMENT (contd)INTERNATIONAL COOPERATIVE ALLIANCE

The study was conducted on the basis of the following objectives :

- i) To make a detailed study of existing practices . in the field of personnel management in selected Cooperative Super Bazars in India,
- ii) To make recommendations and to suggest new measures whichever necessary, in the field of personnel management with a view to improving the general productivity of the employees, and
- iii) To frame guidelines as a result of the above, with a view to assisting the management in the formulation of their personnel policies.

Based on the above objectives, the book has been divided into eight parts. The main headings of these parts are: (i) Organisational set-up and the role of personnel section, (ii) Personnel planning, (iii) Recruitment and resignation, (iv) Training, (v) Compensation, Welfare measures and grievances, (vi) Communication and Social Relationship, (vii) Expectation, Loyalty and Discipline, (viii) Management-employee Union Relationship, and, other two annexures about the study and the stores.

I.C.A.: Sale - A Profile : An Introduction to Sales Management, by Ragnar Arvidsson and S. Dandapani.

ICA Regional Office & Education Centre for South-East Asia, New Delhi, 1971, pages 132 (mimeo).

Selling is not mere distribution. In some setting distribution may be the aim, yet in another system selling as a means for distribution may be necessary. Selling is distribution plus. What this "plus" is difficult to decipher. The distribution differs from country to country, place to place and shop to shop. A generalisation is difficult and may come under a road-roller with all what it means. Nevertheless, a few of the fundamentals capable of functioning as tools to discuss the distribution-plus are common to most situations. This is an attempt to catalogue a few of the items that may fall within the category of "the distribution plus" for those involved in the noble task of protecting the consumer interests through the application of business techniques in the distributive trade.

The book is fully illustrated. Supporting statistics are also provided. It will be useful handbook for the planners and managers of consumers stores. The following are the main contents of the book discussed in detail: (i) Introduction, (ii) A.B.C. of a store, (iii) Feasibility
