of India, conducted the National Debate on Co-operation in 1977, in two parts, for the students in Universities and colleges. The Debate in English was organised at Rajendranagar, Hyderabad, on 8th and 9th February 1977, in collaboration with A.P. Agricultural University and in Hindi language at Udaipur on 19th February 1977 in collaboration with Udaipur University. The National Level Debate followed the Inter-Collegiate Debates conducted earlier by the Universities. The National Debate, for the first time during the year, was conducted separately in English and Hindi languages with a view to encourage participation particularly from the Hindi speaking States. The common topic chosen for English as well as Hindi language National Debate was "Cooperative Movement is the best instrument to involve youth in Programmes Economic Development". Twenty-nine Universities from all over the country, represented by a team of two debators speaking for and against the proposition, participated in English language National Debate, spread over two days, at A.P. Agricultural University. The Hindi language National Debate was participated by 20 Universities, which also included a team sent by Kerala University, Trivandrum. On the eve of these debates, symposia were also organised, both at Hyderabad & Udaipur primarily to educate the students on co-operative thinking. The topic for these Symposia, which attracted eminent cooperators, thinkers and academicians, was "Co-operatives can play a pivotal role in the implementation of 20-Point Economic Programme."

334.1(420) U.K.

EDITOR : Cooperative housing success story.
COOPERATIVE REVIEW(MANCHESTER);
Volume 41, No. 10, Oct. 1976, pp. 1.11.

"The first phase of one of the biggest and most ambitious cooperative housing scheme in Britain has been completed by the South Midlands Coalfield Cooperative Housing Association, run by the East Midlands Housing Association.

The scheme, at Agar Nook, 12 miles north of Leicester will eventually comprise 409 dwellings, plus schools, shops and a public house. It seems opportune, therefore, to trace the history of the East Midlands Housing Association Ltd. This is the first of two articles about the Association both being based on a brief history of the Association prepared by students at the Cooperative college."

"Although the govt. is playing a significant role in relieving the housing shortage in urban and rural areas, govt. efforts alone are not sufficient to solve the housing problem of the country. The progress can be accelerated using the housing coops as agencies for the purpose. These societies can deliver the goods at reduced cost and with greater satisfaction to the community."

Towards an explanation of crisis in a mixed underdeveloped economy.
ECONOMIC & POLITICAL WEEKLY;
Volume XII, Nos. 6, 7 & 8, pp. 205-218.

"The mixed economy, in country after country, has come to face a crisis. The crisis is not temporary or cyclical, but one affecting the very viability of this type of economy. A situation inevitably arises when economic growth cannot proceed further within the framework of the mixed economy without creating enormous inflationary pressures. Inflation, of course, hits at the real living standards of the urban and rural proletariat and semi-proletariat; more important, however from the point of view of the ruling classes, it hits at the petty bourgeoisie and, in particular, the crucial articulate segment of it, the professional groups and the salariat, and throws it into the camp of the opponents of the ruling classes. In the interests of the ruling classes, the state, therefore, attempts to control inflation by cutting back its investment and retarding the pace of economic expansion. Such retardation, of course, throws workers out of employment, especially in the capital goods industries; what is more important again from the ruling class point of view, however, is that it hits at the crucial segment of the urban petty bourgeoisie in another way - educated unemployment swells as jobs do not expand rapidly enough to absorb those, usually, from a petty bourgeois background themselves, who are seeking professional, technical or bureaucratic careers. Besides, such retardation spells ruin for the petty producers and small capitalists and even, has the effect of choking off some of the revenues of accumulation for the monopoly capitalists. The crisis of the mixed economy lies precisely in this predicament : a continuation of economic expansion within its framework creates serious problems for the ruling class; a discontinuation of economic expansion creates equally serious problems for the ruling class.

This paper discusses the question why a mixed economy inevitably leads to a crisis."

Development, Education and the poor: context of South Asia.
 ECONOMIC & POLITICAL WEEKLY;
 Volume XII, No. 9, Feb. 26, 1977; pp.401-408.

"The development efforts of the countries of the Third World, in spite of their enormity and even when successful, have followed a path that has led to the intensification of the problems of poverty, unemployment and inequality. The solution of the problems of poverty, inequality and unemployment requires a different strategy. Elements in this strategy involve the provision of opportunities for self-defined work, encouragement of production of use-values and strengthening of small organisational structures that are not based on the principle of pure exchange. A reordering of the development effort on these lines requires that development be understood not only in terms of GNP, material goods and use-values, but also as a 'state of mind'. To understand the existing state of mind' -which values goods, activities, policies and programmes that lead to increase in poverty-one has to examine the system of education in the developing countries."

Economic performance since the Third Plan and its implications for policy.

pp. 225-240.

"The publication of the slim volume of the final 5th Five-Year Plan nearly three years after the beginning of the Fifth Plan Period provides an opportunity to review the performance of the performance of the economy since independence. In many ways the period since 1965-66, the last year of the 3rd Five-year Plan, marks a watershed. It is argued that the decade 1966-1975 represents a well marked departure from the trends established during the first three plans particularly in respect of public sector investment both in the aggregate and in crucial sectors such as transportation and communication. To a significant extent the considerably below average economic performance in the past decade could be attributed to this failure of the public sector. There is some evidence that the cutback and stagnation in public sector investment has been associated with a considerable decline in net foreign aid. It is suggested that unless the opportunity offered by the present happy position with regard to inventories of foodgrains and foreign exchange is exploited to push up public investment, long-term growth prospects of the economy may be seriously affected. Thus, a return to serious planning that was interrupted in 1966 is called for. It is hoped that the sixth plan would indeed be a plan unlike its two immediate predecessors."

BANERJI, D.:

Community response to the intensified family planning programme.
 ECONOMIC & POLITICAL WEEKLY;
 Volume XII, Nos. 6, 7 and 8, 1977,
 pp. 261-266.

" The objective of the National Population Policy was to build up a mass movement throughout the country in favour of the small family norm. The findings of this study clearly indicate that these objectives have not been achieved. In fact, at many places resort to force to impose sterilisation has precipitated quite the contrary condition - a mass movement against the family planning programme.

Even in a purely quantitative sense and presuming that government figures are reliable, achieving 3.8 million sterilisations in the first six months of 1975-76 is not quite as spectacular as is being projected by the govt. mass media. After all, a level of 3.1 million sterilisations was reached in 1972-73 when there was large-scale use of mass vasectomy camps. A clear lesson was then learnt that such an approach could not be sustained for long. The same question can be asked about the current intensified programme. Is it feasible to keep such intense pressure on the people and on the government functionaries for any length of time, or even throughout 1976-77? Over and above this, there is the question of the demographic profile of the acceptors belonged to demographically dubious classes.

Preoccupation of the entire government machinery with attainment of sterilisation

362 SOCIAL WELFARE, FAMILY PLANNING AND SOCIAL INSURANCE (contd.)

targets has led to a great neglect of the other components of the National Population Policy and indeed of the entire programme to improve the lot of the weaker sections of the population.

The findings of this study make a strong case for switching back to the population policy enunciated by the govt. of India at the Bucharest Conference and in the draft 5th Plan document of 1974. It will require basic structural changes in the government machinery, and a very great effort to regain its lost credibility, to effectively implement that policy."

"This paper has a three-fold task. Firstly,

65 MANAGEMENT BOOK-KEEPING (contd.)

65(540) INDIA (contd.)

It argues, perhaps contrary to popular belief, that the most important requirement-in fact, a pre-condition-for any real progress towards the goal of professionalisation of management is not management training but the acquisition of effective managerial power and autonomy by the managers. This argument is based on the reasoning that, however well-trained and competent the professional manager, professionalism in management can be, and often is, easily frustrated by the intervention of 'controlling interests' usually in pursuit of their self-interest. We shall attempt to support this by concrete evidence. Secondly, the paper analyses the location of controlling power in Indian companies and brings out the fact that in most Indian companies, including the large ones, the controlling power is located, not in the hands of professional managers but in those of controlling interests so that the pre-condition stated above is not fulfilled. On our test, can be described as professionally managed because professional managers lack the power and autonomy necessary to put their professionalism in practice. Finally, the paper discusses the emergence of financial institutions as a countervailing power of controlling groups and analyses the consequences of this development from the viewpoint of professionalisation of management."
